DEAN LUTHER I. BONNEY

Dedication

Any undertaking of value must have a competent and trustworthy leader in order to show success. Portland Junior College in the past year has experienced great success in acquiring a new and permanent campus. Dean Luther I. Bonney has furnished the leadership which has coordinated efforts of the entire college since 1933 and during this recent transition.

Since Dean Bonney took over as Dean of the College his efforts and dreams have had one theme—a permanent Portland Junior College campus. Now that this goal is realized we look forward with him to the fulfillment of greater aspirations in the future.

Thus we the Class of 1948 take pride in dedicating this, the first issue of "THE STAG," to our very capable Dean.

Testimonial to the Board of Directors

A great deal of credit for the administration of Portland Junior College goes to the Board of Directors. Their sincere efforts and attention have established the Junior College permanently in the local scene. Without their patient diligence our position would not be what it is today. We thank them heartily for their unselfish contribution.

The Class of 1947 - 48

A new constitution, a school seal, establishment of school colors, inauguration of a yearbook, formal graduation exercises, and most important of all a new campus and buildings! These are only some of the "firsts" established during the past two years at the Portland Junior College. A record of which any student may well be proud to have had a hand in making. The first college class since the war, we have been a part of the making of history in our institution.

Let's review briefly the past two years of our life as students of Portland Junior College. The fall of 1947 found us at the Mountain View Housing Project, where we did pretty well working and studying under somewhat adverse conditions. One of our first acts was to choose a representative Student Council. A good way to start the year. Frank Bojarczuk, Donald Wood, Donald McGlauflin, Joseph Bak, and Jack Feehan were chosen as representatives of the college class. The usual extra-curricular activities connected with college life were indulged in (secondary to the primary pursuit of acquiring an education, of course). Although our activities were restricted to an extent by the then crowded conditions, we had a pretty good year full of social functions: a Halloween shindig, several informal hops, the Christmas Formal, a dance given by the joint French Clubs of Portland Junior College and Westbrook Junior College, and the final blow-out of the year at Poland Springs featuring a banquet and dance. Curran's Coffee Shop stood us in good stead throughout the year, and there were surprisingly few mortalities as a result of John's dispensing activities.

The basketball team took to the polished courts under the leadership of Coach Arthur "Pat" Sprague and Captain Sid Connolly and did well for themselves and the school. They completed the season with ten victories as against two defeats. Our baseball team led by Captain Jack Feehan upheld the honor of Portland Junior College in the playing field. They wound up the season with five wins and one loss. The Bayside Park winds gave them the name of the Portland Junior College "Blues"—blue hands, feet, and noses. The tennis and golf teams performed nobly in their respective fields and rounded out the athletic program.

In the academic field, various types of literary clubs, an International Relations Club, the French Club, the Debating Society, and the Radio Program were some of the highlights. College assemblies featured guest speakers from various walks of life and a few heated meetings of the student body were held. The famous "Constitutional Convention" will long be remembered. The greatest outburst of school spirit during the year was shown at the meeting held "to back the attack" in a program to secure a grant of money from the State. The success of this program was largely due to the efforts of the student body and their backing of the programs mapped out to obtain the grant. We got it. Another achievement the Class of 1948 can be proud of.

The fall of 1948 found us at the Y.M.C.A. because our newly secured campus and buildings were not ready to be occupied. Strikes, red-tape, and what-have-you caused the construction program to fall behind schedule. However the Y.M.C.A. turned out to be a fairly nice place to hold classes. We were served by a very handy cafeteria which soon became the hub of all school activity. A basketball court was placed at our disposal and the gym classes and the basketball team made good use of it. The basketeers coached by Ray Bicknell, a new addition to the faculty, and led by Captain Tony Hopkins, did themselves proud by winding up the season with thirteen wins while dropping only six. A very successful bowling league was formed although the season ended with a clean sweep by the frosh teams over us "old guys." The "old guys" were in there pitching though and made it a lively contest to the bitter end.

A Student Council to guide our second and final year at Portland Junior College was chosen. Cam Connor, Joe Dalfonso, Ken Gardner, Bud Todd, John Curran, and Don Tibbetts were the Senior Class representatives to this august body. Cam Connor as President; Bud Todd, Vice President; and Don Tibbetts, Secretary-Treasurer did a proficient and efficient job as leaders of the Senior Class.

Our second year saw the inauguration of our first yearbook under the guiding eye of Editor-in-Chief Ed Carr. Bill Poor and Harry Gray teamed up as Co-Editors of the Portland Junior College "News" and led the newspaper staff in turning out some good éditions of the "Mirror of Student Minds." Regular weekly assemblies became the rule upon the opening of the new auditorium. Very impressive dedication ceremonies of historical significance marked this opening. The Class of 1947-48 will always be known as the first class in the history of Portland Junior College to participate in formal graduation exercises, as well as the first class to graduate from its own auditorium which it helped to build.

Class recitations, bull sessions, spirited arguments in class and out, friend-ships made, sporting events, assemblies, soap box orators, some A's and some F's, the bitter with the sweet, dances, banquets, projects launched, some completed and some not, Mountain View, the Y.M.C.A., the "Burma Road," these are some of the memories that will go with us through life. All in all a good two years.

These were two of the busiest years in the history of Portland Junior College and we were there. A part of us will always be there.

Freshman Class

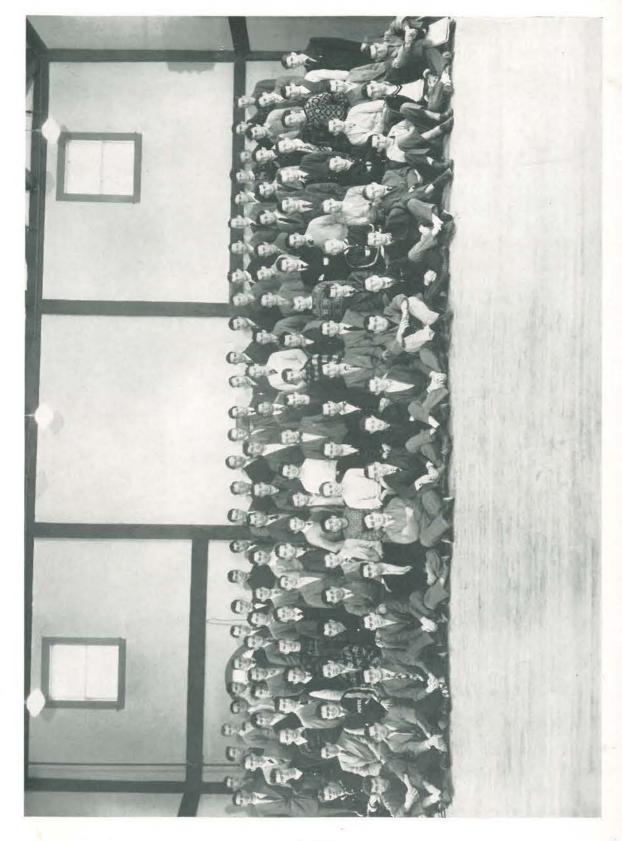

Dedicated to the principle of "finding a better and just way" the Freshman Class at Portland Junior College has spent the school year of 1947-48 acquiring the educational knowledge that will permit it to apply that principle with wisdom and justice. The critical comments daily offered by the students on present international stress, on complex national affairs, and on everyday problems that constitute modern life, show that the determination of the students at Portland Junior College is a sincere and deep-seated determination not to be cast aside at graduation exercises.

War clouds, war talk, and war itself undoubtedly have a great deal to do with the exceptional sobriety displayed by the students of to-day. Most of the men attending colleges today have but recently emerged from the throes of the most wide-spread conflict in history. It is not a pleasant sound for these students to hear talk of another world war so soon. Only thirty months have elapsed since the peace treaty ending World War II was signed, and now black ominous war clouds again hover over the land of Peace and Freedom. It is no wonder, then, that sincere and determined college men throw off the pledge cap and raccoon coat of the conventional collegian for the mantle of the thinker. With each passing day not only classrooms but "bull sessions" take on an added seriousness. Campus life has changed. The college theme has changed.

Wherever freedom of thought and expression are found, students who have pledged themselves to the attainment of a better international understanding through education will also be found. Here at Portland Junior College where the purest form of democracy is spontaneously and consistently encouraged, the Freshman Class has taken up the new theme. And with its dedication to find a "better and just way" . . . to wipe out injustice and its walking-mate War . . . the Freshman Class of 1948 slowly approaches the highest goal yet set by man . . . PEACE ON EARTH.

The Pre-College Division

The Pre-College program was instituted at Portland Junior College to benefit veterans who needed additional credits for freshman standing in the college courses. Under an arrangement with the State Department of Education the Pre-College courses were accepted toward credit for a high school diploma by the Maine Equivalency Board in the case of veterans who entered the armed services before July 1, 1946. These courses were also opened to non-veterans for refresher purposes. These are accelerated courses, and each course in sixteen weeks completes the equivalent of a year of high school work.

During the fall semester of 1947-48 the pre-college division received their training in temporary classrooms at the Portland Boys Club. Beginning with the 1948 spring semester they moved, with the rest of the student body, to the new buildings on the Falmouth Street campus. At present, because of the lack of laboratory facilities, the men taking chemistry and physics have been pursuing these subjects at Portland and Deering High Schools.

The men in this division are eligible to become members of any of the school's numerous club activities and sport programs. For the past several terms the men of the pre-college have contributed to the fine showing of the basketball and baseball teams by providing a number of players for each of these teams.

Approximately six hundred men have gone through this division and of this number nearly seventeen per cent have entered colleges and universities in all sections of the country. A few of these institutions are University of Maine, Bowdoin, Bates, Colby, University of New Hampshire, Duke University, Syracuse University, Pratt Institute, Rensselear Polytechnical Institute, University of Houston, and many others of nation wide reputation.

The average age of this group in 1948 is twenty years in a range from eighteen to thirty-four years. Of this number, about eighty percent are receiving their education through the Veterans Administration Educational program. Many of the men have entered from out of state, some from as far away as Kansas, Pennsylvania, and Texas.

The future of this division depends largely on the demand, and to quote the Dean, "will continue as long as the division serves a need."

The Stag

Although our school's history dates back to 1933 this year of 1948 seems to be the beginning point for traditions. Along with our new campus and formal graduation exercises we are happy to be able to present to the graduation class a yearbook by which we will retain a clearer picture of our activities here at Portland Junior College.

It was shortly after the move to the Brighton Avenue site that the idea of a yearbook began to materialize. A group of interested students met to setup the means of attacking our objective. The most interested member of the group, in the person of Edwin Carr, Jr., was put in the top command position, that of Editor-in-chief. Ed's strategy was blitz-krieg, for time was a limiting factor. The "General Staff" snapped to, and the battle with the dead line was on.

Jack Cady, circulation manager, and his crew, Joe Joyce and John Violette, rushed out into the field to contact the students in person to sign their names to the dotted line of the subscription blanks. At the same time a similar movement was in progress in the business section of Portland under the personal direction of the Advertisement Editor, Charles Poulson, Jr., and his assistants, James Ferris, William Luce, and Clyde Warburg.

William McKinley, Managing Editor, was put in the position of procurement and organization of the book, assisted by John Martin and Ray Rutan, and under the watchful eye of Clyde Warburg, the Business Manager. In this same branch were the Feature writers, Donald Cash and George Gagliarde; Donald McGlauflin, Senior Editor; Henry Latini, Freshman Editor; and Jim Ferris, Pre-college Editor. Here too was Cam Connor, the Sports Editor, and his assistant, Charles Bonney. In charge of the fine photography work in the book was our own camera man, Donald Brown.

One of the jobs of this editorial staff was to choose an appropriate name for our brain child. It was decided to let the school have its say in the affair, and so a contest was started to find a name suitable to the book. Many different names were submitted, but Harry L. Gray's "The Stag" was the one to win.

We wish to thank all of those persons who helped to publish this first issue of "The Stag," especially Mr. William Northgraves, who gave us a big boost from the very start.

Portland Junior College News

The Portland Junior College News is one of the college's oldest and most successful activities.

Soon after the settlement on the new campus a group of interested students under faculty adviser Mr. Richard Woodbury reorganized and continued the long life of the News. With the single interruption of the war years the paper has been rolling off the presses for ten years. Although the staff personnel changes the format and high-calibre material remain consistent. One major change did develop this year, however, for during this spring semester the paper issued its first six and eight page editions. These larger size issues received much favorable comment from the students, faculty and alumni.

The most notable change in the history of the News has been its large jump in circulation. Beginning with a circulation of 250, for students only, the News now prints and distributes 1,600 copies.

They are distributed among the 300-odd students and mailed to 1,100 alumni, as well as sent to many colleges throughout the country.

The editors and staff strive to get the latest news possible into the paper. However, like any monthly publication, it depends a great deal on interesting features, columns, editorials and the like. Actually the News serves a double purpose. Not only does it give the readers an enjoyable moment but it is valuable in a historical sense. Past issues are kept in bound volumes: one copy in the school office and the other in the newspaper office.

Since arriving on the new campus the staff have had an office in which to work. Since one of the great difficulties faced in the past has been the lack of facilities, an immediate improvement was noted in the first issue published on the new campus. With a centrally located office, typewriters, and other improvements, the News has had a promising year. The big affair of the year for the staff was the press banquet held on May 14 at which time the editors of the paper were presented lapel pins, in recognition of their year's work.

Student Council

With the founding of Portland Junior College in 1933, the administration was aware that a well-organized student council would lend much to the construction which was ahead. A pattern was established at once and over the years it developed with the aid of the masses in the classes. Unsettled conditions during the war retarded progress, but with V-Day the long-range plans of the administration were renewed with abounding vigor. Our post-war opening found many unacquainted with the know-how of student government and administration, but backed by Patton's motto, "Get it done, no matter what," we accomplished the task of forming the nucleus of our present organization.

In 1947 we were confronted with the problem of obtaining financial aid from the state. Students became lobbyists. We engaged in the fine art of politics by contacting senators, representatives, and prominent businessmen. Speakers were sent to outlying sections of the state to shout our cause. On the last night of the session our efforts were rewarded. The legislature had granted $50,000 to assist in our building program.

As 1948 dawned we found ourselves engaged in extensive programs of policy making. The organization of committees for class day, commencement plans, exam-schedules, charters, and budgets filled the college year. Much of our time was taken up by the ponderous and complex behind-the-scene activities. We have tried our best to carry out our responsibilities in a sincere, democratic fashion. We have gained much in the procedure of government, habits of thought and action, and general culture. When we leave we hope that we will have laid a strong foundation for the future student councils—to them we say, make use of your opportunities—carry on.

International Relations Club

The purpose of the recently re-activated International Relations Club is to acquaint its members with information on contemporary affairs through forums, discussions, and intercollegiate activities. By these means students attempt to reach intelligent opinions on contemporary affairs.

The club's business is handled by the Executive Council, composed of the club's officers, James Nanos, President; Richard Palmer, Secretary-Treasurer; two advisory members, Louis LaFleur and Warren Boggs, with the assistance of Mr. Marshall, Faculty Adviser.

The club has one aim: to reach all the students at Portland Junior College and encourage their interest and action on important affairs of the day. To do this the club arranges for speakers for the assemblies, secures informational pamphlets for library use, and places editorials and other thought-stimulating printed material on the bulletin boards.

Although a young club it is already affiliated with the Carnegie Foundation for the Endowment of Peace and the Collegiate Conference for the United Nations. It is also sending delegates to the International Relations Club Intra-State Conferences.

The year 1947-48 has seen much pioneering at the College; the International Relations Club stands as one of the results of such pioneering. Because of its worth-while aims it has gained the respect and support of the student body. The foundation has been laid, the constitution drawn up, and by-laws approved. We may well expect that in the future years, students will still respect and support the club that traditionally seeks information and truth . . . the International Relations Club of Portland Junior College.

Les Confreres Gaulois

The French Club is one of the oldest clubs of Portland Junior College. It originated with a group of students of the French language who had a common objective . . . understanding French culture. With this in mind the student participants joined together in many successful endeavors.

The name of the club was selected from a list submitted by the students of Mr. Clark and Mr. Morin's French and Spanish classes. The officers of the club when it was first organized were John Xaphes, President; Pierre Morin, Secretary; and Roland Michaud, Treasurer. The officers of the club for the year 1947-48 are Roland Michaud, President; Pierre Morin, Vice President; Richard Rowe, Secretary; and John Violette, Treasurer.

The club's foremost activity to be well remembered is the joint benefit dance held at the Eastland Hotel Ballroom under the able guidance of the officers and the faculty advisers, Mr. E. B. Clark, Jr., and Mr. Maurice Morin. Students of Portland Junior College and Westbrook Junior College spent a gay evening dancing to the music of Bob Percival's orchestra.

With the proceeds of the dance the clubs of Portland Junior College and Westbrook Junior College bought food and clothing for the needy students of the University of Strasbourg in Paris, France.

The French Club has established a reputation to be well remembered by this year's graduating class. Its vigorous beginning may well serve as a stimulus for the newcomers to Portland Junior College who have an interest in "understanding French culture."

The Glee Club

With the final chapter of a historic year entered into the annals of Portland Junior College, we also record another historic social achievement, the Glee Club.

Like most clubs at Portland Junior College, the glee club was established during the college's period of transition. Under the guiding hand of its director, Mr. Robert Goff, the club valiantly struggled through this period and finally came into its own.

The club made its debut at the first general assembly held on the new campus. For its introduction, the glee club presented a few ever-popular ballads and introduced the new college song. The performance arrived at true distinction, if we are to judge by the enthusiastic response it received from its student audience.

The club then distinguished itself in the formal dedication exercises and in a musical program on the College rádio program.

The final appearance of the club at the graduating exercises proved that it had come a long way since its first meeting at the Y.M.C.A. in November, 1947.

Looking back over the long, rugged road upon which the club has travelled, it is with swelling pride that we say, "Well done, fellows, well done."

Outing Club

The purpose of the Portland Junior College Outing Club is to provide the student body with the opportunity to participate in any sport other than those presented through the regular athletic program of the school.

The club had difficulties in its early stages, because of the crowded conditions at the Y.M.C.A. and the preparations of moving to the new campus. However, it still managed to top off the winter season with one of the highlights of the school year; a week of skiing during the February vacation at Dyke Mountain, Sebago, Maine.

The first meeting of the year was held on October 20, 1947 at the Y.M.C.A. for the purpose of electing officers for the coming school year. The officers elected at this meeting were Alvah Dillenbach, President; Eli Kroot, Vice President; Eliott Mitchell, Treasurer; and Donald Sawyer, Secretary. Mr. Alfred Clarke, former professional skier and member of the Dartmouth Outing Club, agreed at this time to act in the capacity of faculty adviser.

The latest addition to the activities of the club was the formation of a rifle team. Although only in its early stages it is hoped that the team will be able to hold matches with the local rifle teams throughout the remainder of the year.

Radio Program

From almost nothing but a question and answer program, Portland Junior College On The Air has developed into a powerful little five-watter, spreading the school news, shedding humor, and even a little worthwhile information. Slowly Portland Junior College On The Air has grown into a radio program to be listened to; and the responsibility for this transformation rests on the active criticisms of the student body and the hawkeye direction of the program faculty adviser, Mr. John Jaques.

Together, these two factors have whipped a new life into an old body. Constant criticism . . . mostly unfavorable . . . showed Mr. Jaques that something had to be done. At the end of the first semester of this school year, he secured the services of men willing to give some of their time to make the program listenable. First a program director was needed to arrange rehearsals and assume the responsibility of the next week's show. For this part Robert Barron of the Freshman Class was employed. Next came the people that would write the programs so that a director would have something to direct. This group had to be one of many diversified interests, capable of writing something students, faculty, business owners and business people all would enjoy. A quartet of script-writers, consisting of Larry Colwell, Joe Dalfonso, Henry Latini, and Harry Gray volunteered for the job and to date have done something approaching an excellence with that job. To introduce all that was written and directed, Mr. Jaques acquired the golden-toned voice of Henry Perates to announce introductions, news, and any other sundry items calling for a professional touch.

The Literary Club

The activities of the Literary Club were resumed again this year and although not wholly successful in avoiding the pressure of other events (like term papers and final exams), late in the second semester the club did engage in a very interesting discussion of "Candide" by Voltaire.

The students who showed the necessary time, enthusiasm, and ability to read famous books and discuss them were Richard Palmer, John Violette, Lewis LaFleur, Pierre Morin, and Richard Rowe. These men met with the members of the English department in the language office of East Hall each Thursday afternoon for a lively and very informal, unhampered discussion of the book chosen at the previous meeting.

This was the second year the Literary Club has formed, and as the freshman members plan to start early next fall, there is a third year promised; and three years should be plenty to establish another worth while tradition for Portland Junior College.

Basketball

Compiling an impressive 13-6 win record under the tutelage of first-year coach Ray Bicknell, the Green-and-White-clad basketballers concluded the '47-'48 season with a decisive 75-58 over the Gorham State Teachers' College quintet.

Paced by high scorers Robert Kirby and Anthony Hopkins, who led the team's scoring parade with 236 and 175 tallies respectively, the team garnered 1,099 points for the season total compared to 942 for the opposition.

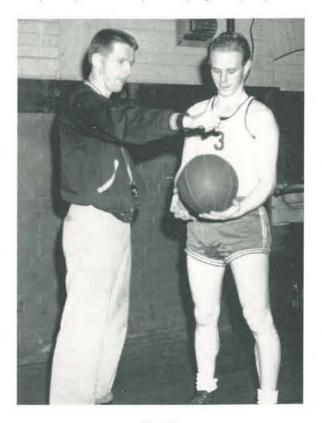

The team started the season with a nine-man squad, and although they were doing well in the victory department, they were bolstered at mid-year by the addition of such hoop notables as William Amergian, Andrew Lano, John Kirby, and William Edes. The original squad included, in addition to Hopkins and Kirby, John Meader, Douglas Feyler, Robert Slipp, Herbert Woodbrey, Dwight McLeod, Pierre Harnois, and John Kershaw.

This year's five started the season with a 55-39 win over the Bowdoin Jayvees, and continued undefeated until they were nipped 61-58 in an overtime duel with the New Hampton, N. H., quintet. This loss was later avenged by an 81-60 score in a game played in Portland. The Bicknellmen also came out on the short end of contests with the University of New Hampshire Frosh, Maine Annex, Bates Jayvees, and the Springfield College Jayvees. They exchanged wins with the courtsters from New England College of Henniker, N. H.

Baseball

Starting the 1948 season with a seven-veteran nucleus, Coach Ray Bicknell has, in his first year at the helm, been graced by the addition of enough potential material to make this year's team the type that many coaches dream about.

Pitchers John Kershaw and Ernest Todd, shortstop John Meader, and outfielders Lewis Waugh, John Caminiti, Richard Goodie, and William Rocheleau were the holdovers from which Mr. Bicknell fashioned the squad. Aiding and abetting these seven veterans were such capable performers as catchers William Edes and Ronald Harwood, first baseman Charles Ammann, and second sacker Roland

"Chimmy" Chamard. Andrew Lano held down the third base position, while Anthony Hopkins and Pierre Harnois worked into the outfield.

In their first two contests of the season the team proved that their booming bats would be heard throughout Southern Maine; they swamped the Bowdoin Jayvees and the Northeastern Business College teams both by the impressive score of 18-3. In their third contest they set back the Fort Williams soldier nine by another impressive score of 15-1. This game also marked the beginning of Lewis Waugh's career as pitcher extraordinary.

Other games also on the schedule were a return game with Northeastern Business College plus Bates Jayvees, Colby Jayvees, Gorham State Teachers' College, Nichols Junior College, and the New England College of Hennicker, N. H. teams.

Bowling

Sixty students and faculty members crowded the YMCA alleys twice a week during the winter season in order to participate in the bowling league, the first in the history of Portland Junior College. The combined classes of '48 and '49 gave their blessings to the league in the form of three trophies that were presented to the winning team, the high individual average scoreholder, and the highest single string bowler. The trophy that was presented to the winning team is to be retained in the school archives in order to receive the names of future champions.

Roland Chamard, a Freshman, took two of the trophies with a 100 average for the season and a high score of 128 for one string. John A. Johnson, Jr., also chalked up a 128 in league competition but conceded the title to Chamard in deference to the 134 which the latter bowled in an intercollegiate match with the University of Maine Annex team. Johnson was also runner-up in the season average department with a 96.

In addition to copping the two individual honors the Freshmen also took team honors when the Frosh B, C, and E squads ended the season in a three-way tie for first place. The E team consisting of Captain John Meader, John Kershaw, Joseph Joyce, Anthony Hopkins, and Herbert Woodbrey finally gained first place by setting down the Freshman B combine in a twelve box play-off string. The team made up of Edwin Carr, Jr., Richard Skillin, Ernest Todd, John A. Johnson, Jr., and Lawrence Hilton led the Senior delegation in the final standings.

The bowling committee, which arranged the schedules and did a commendable job in keeping the embryo league functioning smoothly, was composed of Donald Tibbetts, Edwin Carr, Jr., and Melvin Jacobs.

Two matches were held with the University of Maine Annex teams and on these occasions Vernon Lord, Charles Ammann, Chamard, Johnson, and Carr brought decisive victories home to the Junior College.

Golf

Faced by such almost unsurmountable obstacles as unfavorable weather conditions and difficulty in arranging satisfactory practice sessions on the clear days, the golf team, again under the guiding hand of coach Alfred Clarke, rounded slowly into shape for its first match of the season on May 18 with the University of Maine Annex team on the latter's home course.

Building his squad around the sturdy foundation that remained from last year's team, Clarke added Andrew Lano, Robert Slipp, Frank Nanos, and Donald Neilson to holdovers Otto Plequette, William McKinley, and John Johnson.

Although only two matches are listed at this time, it appears likely that other matches will be added to this embryo schedule shortly after press time for this volume, which will bring the schedule up to a par with those of other years.

Tennis

Tennis, long considered a minor sport at Portland Junior College, seems destined this year to carve its name permanently in the athletic annals of the college.

Despite the fact that Charles Bonney was the lone holdover from last year's squad, Teacher-Coach Maurice Morin arranged an ambitious schedule that provided this season's team with numerous worthy adversaries. Mr. Morin more than welcomed such ex-high school luminaries as Robert Slipp, Warren Boggs, Henry Gilbert, Charles Liponis, Charles Mack, Stanley Fink, Richard Sirois, Pierre Morin, Douglas Feyler, James Nanos, and Murray Reuben into the fold.

The team, playing its home games on the Deering Oaks courts, and traveling to the away from home games by private automobiles, expected to direct its efforts primarily toward annexing the "City College Championship" from the Northeastern Business College crew. Even with the galaxy of court stars previously mentioned the team was hard pressed on many occasions but it came through the season with a commendable record.

A GOOD

OLD "DOWN EAST" CUSTOM ...

When we say that B&M BAKED BEANS, New England's favorites, are "brick-oven baked" our exact meaning is:

slowly, an entire day, in brick ovens and open pots...not just baked a little and boiled a lot.... that they are truly baked as New England housewives have always baked beans with extra delicious flavor and with no newfangled short cuts.

by New Englanders, in famous New England kitchens in strict accordance with the old New England recipe.

Such plain speaking, we believe, is, like our bean baking a time-honored "Down East" custom.

The Stag Appreciations

Only through the tireless efforts of many people has the first edition of the Portland Junior College yearbook, The Stag, been printed and published. We wish to extend appreciation and thanks to the following firms and individuals for the invaluable aid they contributed toward the first issue of The Stag.

Mr. Harmon and the staff at the Forest City Printing Company, the printers of The Stag.

Mr. William Northgraves, Mr. Henri Benoit, and Mr. George Morrill for their whole-hearted interest and cooperation.

Mr. John Jaques, Head of the English Department, for his close cooperation, helpful criticism, and keen interest in this our first issue.

Donald Brown, a member of our graduating class, for his great cooperation and for the pictures that he took for our book.

A. Raymond Rutan and John Martin, assistant managing editors; Donald Cash, George Gagliarde, and Donald McGlauflin, for their work on the Senior and Faculty Sections; Joseph Joyce, Jack Cady, John Violette, Charles Poulson, Jr., William Luce, Jr., and James Ferris, for their management of the Advertising and Circulation; Clyde Warburg, for his handling of the Business Manager's position; Cameron Connor, for the Sports; and all the fellows that took care of the club reports.

Without the friendly cooperation of our many advertisers, this first edition of The Stag would not have been the success we hope it is.

To the above mentioned people, the builders of another first at Portland Junior College, The Stag, we give our sincere thanks—and congratulations.
