11-17-2014

The Free Press Vol 46 Issue 9, 11-17-2014

Sam Hill
University of Southern Maine

Follow this and additional works at: http://digitalcommons.usm.maine.edu/free_press

Recommended Citation
http://digitalcommons.usm.maine.edu/free_press/126

This Book is brought to you for free and open access by the Student Newspapers at USM Digital Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in Free Press, The, 1971- by an authorized administrator of USM Digital Commons. For more information, please contact jessica.c.hovey@maine.edu.
Chronicling USM’s national media attention

Will the protests at the University of Southern Maine spark a national student movement?

The American Studies Association has launched a new website with a map featuring schools across the nation they believe serve as examples of “assaults on academic freedom.” USM is on that list.

The ASA is citing USM’s most recent faculty layoffs and elimination of undergraduate and graduate programs as reasons for inclusion.

The project, which is considered an ongoing, aims to document all the schools that violate academic freedom, cut departments and programs and participate in research surveillance. They also include schools that practice close policing of protests, especially ones that lead to violence and discrimination.

The ASA have called upon the scholars, teachers, administrators and activists of America to pay attention to these troubling patterns in public higher education. So far there are 25 American universities on the online map.

“We were already sensitive to the kinds of pressures that our colleagues [at USM] were working under,” said Matt Jacobson, former ASA president and acting director of public humanities at Yale. “We’ve been especially alert to situations where high-achieving programs were under threat.”

According to the introduction on the website, the ASA hopes to call attention to these “crimes against education” and show that these situations are not isolated incidents. Jacobson said that USM’s decisions, like national ones made towards education, are guided by a narrow, utilitarian vision.

“We hope to raise questions about our educational priorities as a society,” said Jacobson.

Immensely budget gaps, mass layoffs and the shrinking or elimination of popular academic departments are all issues that are part of larger trends nationally, ASA, along with many other institutions’ blogs and publications, compare USM’s crisis with problems across the nation they believe serve as examples of “assaults on academic freedom.”

“Students and faculty at USM have organized opposition from Students and Faculty, Rescinds Proposed Cuts,” said Ellen Spahn, community correspondent of the American Student Association.

“We hope to raise questions about our educational priorities as a society,” said Jacobson. “We’re very much in the dark.”

Provost Joseph McDonnell explained that, though some argue there are ambiguities with the process, administration is taking their obligation seriously to provide students the opportunity to graduate in these programs.

“We’re working to that objective,” said McDonnell. “We’re trying to make sure courses are in place for the spring semester and beyond that. Because there are so few students enrolled in these programs, it does give the opportunity for individualized plans.”

According to Ryden, the dean’s office has contacted students saying there will be ANES courses offered, but possibly not by current faculty, and with no specifics about what those courses may be.

“A real point of confusion is what’s going to happen with students working on their master’s theses. Students are still frustrated,” said Ryden. “We’re very much in the dark. They haven’t been given any guidance, specific guidance, at all by the administration.”

S. Monroe Duboise, associate professor of molecular biology and microbiology in the applied medical sciences program, also had limited knowledge on what the teach-out plan will look like, stating in an email, “I wish there were more that I could tell you about the plans being made. Meetings of the CSTH dean with individual faculty members are proceeding. I cannot predict what the end result will be at this point, I don’t have any additional information at present.”

McDonnell noted that not all students take the thesis path, and that conversations are starting to happen regarding their preference for degree completion. He also reassured that the administration is working on securing part-time faculty to teach the required courses, as well as faculty...
USM combines student services for savings

Sam Hill Editor-in-Chief

USM officials announced a plan to consolidate and centralize student services last Thursday, with aims to cut costs, recruit more students and increase retention.

LaSala emphasized that there’s still hope for USM. “I think there was and is another path forward for USM. That is to stop this downward spiral train of cutting courses which is only going to make our declining enrollment worse and hurt our bottom line because we’re cutting faculty that are bringing in revenue for the University,” said LaSala. “We need to slow this train down.”

“We shouldn’t let this supposed crisis moment define us as an institution.”

Meaghan LaSala, senior women and gender studies major, speaks out against program eliminations.

Annie Quandt Intern

As of Friday, the USM Preservation Fund reached its $10,000 goal. The fundraiser, which was started last spring by the protest group Students for #USMFuture, has two initiatives: One is to fund an independent audit, the other is to provide legal counsel to students.

LaSala discussed the importance of legal counsel, noting that the administration is still unable to tell students how they’ll be able to finish their degrees.

“We’re firing the only professors that have the training and credentials to offer these courses that are needed to graduate,” said LaSala. “When students declare a major, that’s a legal contract with the university, that they are obligated to fulfill in terms of providing students the education they signed up for.”

LaSala noted that five programs at USM have been cut, including geosciences, French and German, and humanities and public administration at the Lewiston-Auburn campus were also cut.

“We’re losing our only tenured classics professor; we’re no longer going to be able to offer a class in the major,” said LaSala. LaSala also noted the stress some faculty face with the cuts.

“An office of career development and community engagement will also be created through centralizing resources, which will allow the university to better connect students with internships and careers with local businesses,” Quint said. “Again, it’s something that individuals departments might do well across the campus, but something we need to pull together and do well as an institution.”

“We want to be the one’s to do it right and if we can, this can really transform the university.”

“About 25 faculty were re-trenched, and a lot of faculty chose early retirement, but not all those retirements were able to save other faculty positions, because if they weren’t in the programs being targeted by the administration, then junior faculty were still retrenched,” said LaSala. “We’ve lost five programs since the start of the semester, but many other programs are losing half of their faculty.”

LaSala believes these are cuts that will have a lasting impact on USM.

“We’re losing our only tenured classics professor; we’re no longer going to be able to do that kind of work.”

LaSala noted that the university is advocating for a shift toward more adjunct professors.

“They’ll just replace these positions with part-time positions, but those positions are underpaid, unstable,” said LaSala. “I know one adjunct professor that calls it her volunteer job. They don’t have an office. They don’t have the resources to support students the same way that tenured faculty do.”

Paul Nakroshis, a physics professor at USM, agrees that the course load put on other professors is too much.

With a goal of reinstating transparency, sharing governance and advocating for state investment in USM, many have donated to the fund. Not only have professors donated, but LaSala says many alumni, students, families and members of the southern Maine community have also contributed to the fund.

Nakroshis explained that he donated because he believes the students are acting more intelligently than the university governing system.

LaSala emphasized that there’s still hope for USM. “I think there was and is another path forward for USM. That is to stop this downward spiral train of cutting courses which is only going to make our declining enrollment worse and hurt our bottom line because we’re cutting faculty that are bringing in revenue for the University,” said LaSala. “We need to slow this train down.”

“We shouldn’t let this supposed crisis moment define us as an institution,” said LaSala. “The region of southern Maine deserves a first-class institution, and we need to make sure we can afford it.”

Annie Quandt

news@usmfreepress.org

The concept is great and we’ve planned it well, but now it’s time for that hard work,” said Quint. “They’re going to be the one’s to do it right and if we can, this can really transform the university.”
From NATIONAL on page 1 country, all of which can have potentially devastating consequences.

“For the last 50 years there has been a tug-of-war between educators and non-educators for the soul of the American university. Educators are losing to politicians in some places and to corporate board members and regents in others,” said Jacobson. “Local struggles in this setting are most often cautionary tales about the power that non-educators have over educators.”

USM’s steady decline in enrollment and projected budget shortfalls have been documented for many years now. However, instances of USM’s future being discussed, through more national channels, has been relatively recent.

The first wave of attention USM received was back in March when former president Theo Kalikow announced the elimination of American and New England studies, geosciences, arts and humanities at Lewiston/Auburn and recreation and leisure studies. Soon following was the first in a series of layoffs or “relocations” of a dozen fac-culty members. Protests by the new

Administrators are taking action and only then figuring out repercussions,” Ryden said.

According to McDonnell, however, some plan is better than no plan. It’s better to have courses planned out over a two year span so students know when they’ll be available than to have it completely up in the air. This way, he believes, students have a visible path to continue on toward graduation, with the understanding that some exceptions can be made beyond the two year plan.

“These are difficult times for the university, faculty and students,” said McDonnell. “It’s important that we work together cooperatively to serve the students in light of the budgetary constraints we are facing. I deeply appreciate the cooperation of faculty in best serving out students.”

USM’s story would fit right into the narratives on austerity and the war on education in America today

Lauren Besanko, criminology graduate and local politician

From TEACH OUT on page 1 to advise in thesis research.

“If I think students need to be able to see a path,” said McDonnell. “Exceptions can be made, but I also think students will want to see what’s being offered to them each semester, rather than having the whole thing opened.”

McDonnell explained that it’s about what the university can offer and a students’ schedule; students are not restricted to a two-year time span.

“We do have the option to tailor these plans for each student,” said McDonnell. “Students ought to know when courses are being offered so they can plan their schedule.”

Still, to some, this plan seems difficult to interpret and unrealistic, given that USM is such a nontraditional school.

Administrators are taking action and only then figuring out repercussions,” Ryden said.

According to McDonnell, however, some plan is better than no plan. It’s better to have courses planned out over a two year span so students know when they’ll be available than to have it completely up in the air. This way, he believes, students have a visible path to continue on toward graduation, with the understanding that some exceptions can be made beyond the two year plan.

“These are difficult times for the university, faculty and students,” said McDonnell. “It’s important that we work together cooperatively to serve the students in light of the budgetary constraints we are facing. I deeply appreciate the cooperation of faculty in best serving out students.”

As an educational institution, like neoliberalism’s infiltration of educational institutions.

Krugman wrote a short opinion piece and called USM’s fiscal situation an “ugly example” of how a school’s educational qualities can be degraded once valuable professors are fired and departments are gutted. Krugman also added sharply rising tuition and sharp cuts in state funding as factors in the financial problem. According to Krugman, USM’s administration is eager to downsize liberal arts and social sciences, which has direct educational consequences.

Other writers, like Lambert Strether at “Naked Capitalism,” argue that USM, like many struggling public colleges, has become a microcosm of society at large, with top administrators representing the 1% who hold and delegate all the resources. Strether believes that greed and corruption have trick-ed down from the corporate and financial sector and has dominated some of America’s institutions of higher learning. USM’s administrators need to allocate the funds more strategically, or risk being accused of leading the school towards corpo-ratization, which again is cited as a situation not unique to USM.

Columnist Madonna Gauding at the Occasional Planet agrees and adds that in an educational environment where the administrators refer to the students as “customers,” where the school’s budget is being spent should be something everybody is keeping an eye on.

Gauding hopes that the USM student and faculty protests spark a national movement that fights back against educational issues like tu-lion hikes, lack of funding and siencing of political dissent.

“Students are being denied a more enriching educational experience,” said Gauding. “If we’re lucky, students will take over where Occupy Wall Street left off.”

“If we care about USM’s future and the future of public higher education, we need to stop flat funding our public universities,” said Dave Kerschner, a USM doctoral gradate.

Regardless of where the specific source of USM’s budget deficit lies, one thing is for certain: schools are going through similar problems and using USM as an example of what can go wrong, when the administration is forced to cut faculty and programs.

Lauren Besanko, a criminology graduate and local politician, said that she’d be surprised if USM wasn’t on the radar of players in the social justice and education arena.

“USM’s story would fit right into the narratives on austerity and the war on education in America today,” said Besanko.

According to Jacobson, the term austerity has become a buzzword for the easy gutting of values and programs that more Americans don’t want gutted, like a good education for young people.

“The battle over USM cuts right into the bone of all of this,” said Jacobson. “We’re thinking that Maine will certainly be on our outlook.”

Emma@usmfreepress.org
@EmmaJames94

francis@usmfreepress.org
@FrancisFisiuk

Apply now:

www.usmfreepress.org/get-involved

Staff Writers
Columnists
Photographers
Graphic Designers
Ad Executives
Marketing Assistants
Social Media Coordinators

Facts. Get some.
Student worries about value of her education

Brian Gordon
Free Press Staff

The University’s graduate degree program in American and New England Studies has been abolished as part of the cuts handed down by President David Flanagan and the board of trustees. No teach out plan has been available to students or faculty, leaving students wondering how they will finish their second year if the administration is giving them. They are in the process of firing tenured professors and hiring adjunct or temporary workers in their place.

One of the students affected by the elimination of the program is Kimberly Clark, a Gray, Maine native who graduated from USM with a Media Studies degree in 2010 to pursue a master’s degree with a Media Studies degree in Kimberley Clark, a Gray, Maine place.

“I didn’t want to be a guinea pig,” said Clark. “It’s certainly going to be detrimental, but my education will be like...”

“I worry about the value of my education, moving forward,” said Clark. “It’s certainly going to be detrimental, but my education will be like...”

“I will finish within the two year allotment,” said Clark. “The question is the quality and losing my professors - and who is assigned to me now?”

A search on MaineStreet yields only two classes available to Clark both to be taught in room “TBA,” on days “TBA” and the teacher as “Staff.”

These types of results don’t inspire confidence in Clark who, even used her 401k earned from eight years of working at Time Warner Cable on her education at USM. She didn’t see it as a gamble at the time; it seemed to be a sure thing.

“I invested in my education. I invested in USM because I took that money out of my future,” said Clark. “I believed getting this education would improve my opportunities and my future.”

There was a meeting Tuesday the 11th about the future of the ANES program, but Clark was busy manning the Jumbotron of the Portland Pirates where she’s a technical director of camera operations for all home games. She was hoping to at least get an email about what happened to see if there was a plan.

“The admin and the BOT have no idea what these programs do,” said Clark. “If they did they would be thinking twice.”

Clark doesn’t think the administration is considering the non-traditional structure of USM. She has high school teachers in her classes who want to teach a specialized course in their classrooms. There’s also undergrads and non-matriculated students allowed to take courses in ANES program that don’t receive a master’s degree.

Clark notes many graduates of the program who want to teach a specialized course in their classrooms. There’s also undergrads and non-matriculated students allowed to take courses in ANES program that don’t receive a master’s degree.

“I believe getting this education is the quality and losing my future,” said Clark. “They won’t have the same opportunity that I had.”

Transfer students unaware of budget crisis

Emma James
News Editor

Students visiting USM for an adult, transfer and graduate student open house last week mainly described themselves as being excited to come to the university, but most were completely unaware of any of the program eliminations that have occurred this semester.

Josh Grassman, hoping to transfer to USM from Sienna College after a hiatus of a few years, was a classics major but will be transferring into the communication program.

Though he is switching majors, he described his feelings as “hurt” after learning about the eliminations of the program he once belonged to.

“I took two courses in classics last spring,” said Grassman. “I probably would’ve tried to take more classes if the program wasn’t cut.”

He explained that, although the cuts are saddening, as an outsider he didn’t look at USM and criticize.

“Pretty soon my wallet will be a factor and my opinion will change.” said Grassman. “I can’t complain if I’m not part of the system.”

Tiffany Hart, a student at the University of Maine Orono from 1994-1998 is coming to USM to finish her degree in construction management. She believes that in order for USM to grow as an institution, people need to enroll -- not be scared off by the financial crisis.

“If USM is going to get out of it [financial crisis] they need the student numbers,” said Hart. “I’m doing my part to keep my community alive. Maine isn’t going to do well if we don’t have young professionals.”

Lyna Vladimiroff, a California native, was unaware of the eliminations that have taken place over the past two months. As a humanities major, her program was cut just a few months ago.

“Oh my god,” said Vladimiroff. “I had no idea.”

Vladimiroff hasn’t been in school for over 20 years, and has always dreamed of attending USM.

“I think [eliminations] are horrible,” said Vladimiroff. “It’s so imposh. A lot of people can’t talk to people. They don’t know how. Arts and humanities are so important.”

She described the cuts as “detrimental,” but explained that they do not turn her away from attending USM.

In all three instances, Grassman, Hart and Vladimiroff spoke of the convenience of having a public university so close to their homes.

“It’s just easy to get to,” said Hart.

For many students, seeking an education at a different university is out of the question. Given USM’s non-traditional presence, most students have jobs and, in some cases, families that they cannot uproot to move away.

Bonnie Stearns, director of student services in the college of science, technology and health said that no students have contacted her about applied medical sciences and geosciences, the eliminated programs in her department.

“We are the STEM [science, technology, engineering and math] college and that’s to our benefit,” said Stearns. “It’s unfortunate that we’re losing these programs, but it’s still a robust school. STEM majors are going strong.”

All four agree that, regardless of personal and circumstances USM is facing, it’s important to move forward and look to the future, and to focus on the success of the past.

“We’re supporting the programs we have while supporting our AMS and future students,” said Stearns. “That’s all we really can do right now.”

emma@usmfreepress.org
USMFreePress
USM hosts mentoring sessions with university alum

Two weeks ago the Office of Public Affairs announced that 11 graduates of the University of Southern Maine are returning to the Gorham campus on Wednesday, November 19, to participate in the university’s alumni 30-minute mentoring program. From 12:45 p.m., these alumni will meet with a series of current students for 30-minute sessions during which they will provide mentoring, networking, and share their professional experiences. The entire event will take place in the Presidential and Faculty Dining Rooms in Brooks Student Center.

In the meantime, Dig Boston announced plans to branch out to Portland.

Fast forward to today: Dig Portland is gearing up for its inaugural issue a week from today and the Phoenix has, appropriately enough, risen from the ashes with a new ownership group and editor. Portland, you are officially a two-alt-weekly city again.

The ownership group behind the Portland Sun, a free daily that in recent months cut production down to three editions per week, bought the Phoenix. So a regional group with local ties and an existing city product is doubling down on the market, even after it found it couldn’t fully support the free daily.

When Dig announced in late October it would make a move into Portland, it looked very much like the Phoenix might be closing down and leaving a void in the alt weekly market. Now? Both publications will have to jockey for position.

For full story, see Seth Koenig’s article in the Bangor Daily News.
The future of books

Will e-readers replace printed texts?

I love the weight of a book, the smell of the book and physically closing it when I'm done. It's nostalgic and personally an amazing experience for me.

Jean Jackson, Books a Million Employee

The physicality of literature is important," said Guthro.

Jackson comments by explain ing that e-books are just a new outlet for people to look at the types of books they can read. It's also a greener option because it saves paper and shelf space.

I think the future of the book is bright, both from my perspective as a writer and as a bookseller.

Josh Christie, Manager of Sherman Books

Buck believes that e-books have grown in popularity largely because they're relatively new and up until recently, books were things people could hold. With this important aspect still in mind, Guthro adds commentary to explain the nostalgia behind literature.

As we become more digital, the idea of interacting with a printed edition of the book becomes engaging for all individuals.

The discussion continued to explain more about how although the e-book is a more energy efficient form of reading literature, it will never have the same memorable feel that a printed edition does.

For that reason, it is safe to say that the future of the book is neither one sided or disappearing but rather flourishing in both the aspect of the print edition and the e-book form as well.

“I think the future of the book is bright, both from my perspective as a writer and as a bookseller,” said Christie. “Of course we’re going to see changes as the years go on. However, I think it is a bright future for print books as well as digital books which really are in their infancy.”

Krysteana Scribner
Arts & Culture Editor

Reading books digitally is becoming more and more common. Even with more titles becoming available and e-books going down, some still crave the smell of musty old libraries and think that the printed word is here to stay.

USM hosted a panel of print lovers last week to discuss the future of the printed book, giving predictions and possibilities about the future of written literature.

“I love the weight of a book, the smell of the book and psychologically closing it when I’m done,” said Jean Jackson, operator of the espresso book machine at Books A Million in South Portland, who spends her evenings using the machine to make copies of any book her customers want. “It’s nostalgic and it’s personally an amazing experience for me.”

Jackson hopes that the future of the book stays in print rather than becoming completely digitized.

Sissy Buck, an advisory board member for the center for book arts, explained that as a child, her parents gave her money to buy books at the book fairs her elementary school would have a few times a year, so there is a lot of nostalgia behind the print book for her.

“What I like to think about the future of the book is that no batteries are required to make it work,” said Buck. “People want to buy local, physical objects. There is an appreciation for handmade crafts, vinyl records, wood working and psychical prints of literature. I don’t see the future of the physical book print diminishing but rather flourishing.”

With all the nostalgia that people have around the printed book, it can be hard to imagine a world that solely reads literature using a Kindle device. However, all members agreed that universities are going to see an incline in the use of e-books to replace print textbooks in classrooms.

“In the academic world, you’ll see a transition in many ways. University publishers and schoolships will transition, and print will not be as important because the availability of online texts is on the rise,” said Dr. Clem Guthro, director of the Colby College libraries.

“I love the weight of a book, the smell of the book and physically closing it when I’m done. It’s nostalgic and personally an amazing experience for me.”

Jean Jackson, Books a Million Employee

Blaire said that she would one day get to the point where she doesn’t smell my musty books sitting on the shelves anymore,” said Ring.

Senior English major Christina Blaire said that she would one day like to own a library of her own, and after this discussion, the future of the book doesn’t seem too bleak.

“Conversations for the future of the book can be frustrating because it is such a binary subject to talk about. You either are on one side or the other, this discussion in some ways is a lot like politics,” said Christie. “It’s much more grey in terms of what you agree with. You either love the print version, or hate it - and same goes for the e-books as well.”

The discussion continued to explain more about how although the e-book is a more energy efficient form of reading literature, it will never have the same memorable feel that a printed edition does.

For that reason, it is safe to say that the future of the book is neither one sided or disappearing but rather flourishing in both the aspect of the print edition and the e-book form as well.

“I think the future of the book is bright, both from my perspective as a writer and as a bookseller,” said Christie. "Of course we're going to see changes as the years go on. However, I think it is a bright future for print books as well as digital books which really are in their infancy."
Interstellar has high quality visual imagery

Sergey Miller
Free Press Staff

Interstellar, the newest movie directed by the famous Christopher Nolan, is a solid film which bends dimensions in space time and makes one ponder about even the smallest of physical phenomena in our daily life. The all-star cast of this film includes Matthew McConaughey, Anne Hathaway, Matt Damon and Michael Caine.

This film does not fall short of an experienced and star studded cast, yet this is not the movie’s best feature. The movie’s strongest points are in its visual imagery and music, which takes the viewer on a journey to foreign worlds. The whole viewing of the film is a journey of color, intensifying music and the ability of cinematography to create a surreal movie-going experience.

The movie begins with McCo- naughey’s character, named Coo- per, who is leading an ordinary farming existence in an otherwise unordinary worldliness environment. Droughts, dust storms and famine plague the Earth. The death of Earth is imminent, and the need for interstellar travel has never been higher. However, organizations like NASA have been pushed to underground status and are no longer available to travel into space.

Luckily Cooper is a trained pi- lot, astronaut and explorer, all qualities that have been inherited by his lovable daughter Murph. Once the movie takes off into space, the rather sublime viewing experience takes off into a world of fantastic representation of worm holes, black holes, watery planets and icy planets. Alongside the excellent visual effects are also a strong plot and a moving performance of the entire cast.

Cooper’s daughter (Murph) is a precocious child who seems to overshadow her older brother in both intelligence and a sense of spirituality. The plot moves forward quickly when Cooper is called in to his daughter’s principal’s office to address the serious charge that she has dared to argue to her fellow classmates that the moon landing was an actual event in the history of the world.

While remaining home, his daughter discovers a “ghostly” presence in her room that has given her a message via lines of dust that has formed on the floor through her window. Since Murph is a child who understands binary code she decodes the short and simple message and a robot named Tars is a helpful companion along the way.

The plot of this film focuses on saving the human race. This can be accomplished in two ways: by either finding a new home on a distant planet or starting a new colony while leaving the people on Earth behind. The journey is a long one, the characters find their deepest feelings tested constantly.

The characters explore other worlds, the meaning of human life, what it means to survive, and the quest for hope throughout the film.

There are enough plot twists to drive one’s mind into many conceptual knots and the deeper meaning of the film comes out shining through at the end.

The four astronauts are to find another planet in a different galaxy by way of a worm hole. Along the quest, questions of ethics, human, and emotional complexities run through all the characters.

The quest of the four brave astronauts assigned to this mission at NASA mission and a robot named Tars is a helpful companion along the way.

This movie is sublime in many complex ways which include visual imagery and imaginative exploration of interstellar proportions.

Welcome Huskies!

University Credit Union is here to help you with all of your financial needs.

Checking & Savings Accounts | Mobile Deposit | Private Education Loans | Auto Loans | & More!

Visit us in Portland at 391 Forest Avenue and 1071 Brighton Avenue or at our Shared Branch Kiosk in the Brooks Student Center in Gorham!

Become a member today at ucu.maine.edu

KRISTEANA SCRIBNER
Arts & Culture Editor

Interstellar has high quality visual imagery.

Michael Caine. Save the human race, take a team with you, including the daughter of the professor (Anne Hathaway playing the character of Brand) and either find a way home or start a new colony. The four astronauts are to find another (hostile) planet in a different galaxy by way of a wormhole. Along the quest, questions of ethical, human, and emotional complexities run through all the characters.

The quest of the four brave astronauts assigned to this mission at NASA mission and a robot named Tars is a helpful companion along the way.

The plot of this film focuses on saving the human race. This can be accomplished in two ways: by either finding a new home on a distant planet or starting a new colony while leaving the people on Earth behind. The journey is a long one, the characters find their deepest feelings tested constantly.

The characters explore other worlds, the meaning of human life, what it means to survive, and the quest for hope throughout the film.

There are enough plot twists to drive one’s mind into many conceptual knots and the deeper meaning of the film comes out shining through at the end.

The four astronauts are to find another planet in a different galaxy by way of a worm hole. Along the quest, questions of ethics, human, and emotional complexities run through all the characters, the quest of the four brave astronauts assigned to this last NASA mission.

This movie is sublime in many complex ways which include visual imagery and imaginative exploration of interstellar proportions.

arts@usmfreepress.org

ENG 145: Topics in Literature, The Ghost Story

Looking for a creative class to spook up next semester? Imagine a class over ghosts: When and how did the phenomenon begin? Why do we analyze ghosts, what are the different types and in what ways can we explain their existence? By signing up for this topics in literature class, you may get to know the answers and you don’t need to be an English major to take this course. It can count as an elective for all students.

All you need is the prerequisites of ENG 100 or ENG 104 and an eye class. This unique lecture taught by Professor Richard Swartz will take a look back at the phenomenon of ghosts dating back to the 16th century and how it became one of the most popular literary forms of all time. Swartz has an upbeat attitude and a wide scale knowledge spectrum about his subject, making this class both fun and educating. This class takes place on Mondays from 5:35 to 8:05 p.m. on Portland campus, and all students with the proper prerequisites are welcome to sign up - if they dare!

ENG 145: Topics in Literature, Witchcraft

In 1692, many individuals in New England were accused of performing witchcraft and in turn were executed as punishment. This fascinating topic has a long history to it, and students interested in taking this creative discussion class will have the chance to analyze a variety of literary texts over witches, witchfinders and witchcraft practices. Students will focus their attention to the Salem Witch Trials and work their way to the shift in perception of witches that happened. Participants must take ENG 100 or ENG 104 class, as well as an EYE course, and this class takes place on Mondays and Wednesdays from 6:45 to 10:00 a.m. with Professor Lorraine Carol.

CMS 320: Topics in Media Production II, Photojournalism

For students interested in becoming journalists (but don't have access to the major itself here at USM) CMS 320 will offer Topics in Media Production on Photojournalism. Students will learn to master the basics of digital photography, lighting and Photoshop. Although students are required to bring their own digital camera to the course, the benefits of photo assignments, field trips, exciting demonstrations and unique knowledge edgeable discussion make the cost worth your while. Taught by Matt DeSormeau and Michael Caine, this class takes place on Thursdays from 5:45 to 8:05 p.m.

THE 102: Theatre Department, Acting for Non-majors

Have you ever wanted to take an acting class but because you weren’t a theatre major, you decided against it? Well now you can do just that. THE 102 is an acting class for non-majors that helps students to gain a basic understanding of theatre and performance. By teaching students relaxation skills in front of crowds and showing them improvisation tactics, students learn public speaking and performance skills that they can take with them throughout their life. This class, taught by Professor Chabora, requires no prerequisites and takes place on Mondays from 5:35 to 8:05 p.m.

RHF 118: Yoga

Going to college can be a full-time job and sometimes it is hard to find time to exercise. This class offers students a class to get exercise as well as an education on what Yoga is and why we exercise. This class takes place every Monday and Wednesday from 9:00 to 10:00 a.m. with Professor Maria Connor. This spiritual practice to transform the body and mind not only allows individuals to connect with themselves, but can also burn up to 175 calories in one hour! This makes the Yoga class a fun and creative elective to take next semester.
Peter and Thomas Campbell otherwise known as 8mufnz, released their entry for the Doritos 2015 "Crash the Superbowl" commercial contest earlier this month. The video has been buzzing around the most popular submissions in the world ever since, and has even reached the number one spot for a few hours last week.

The student filmed short, titled "The Gnome," is set in a house party and features two gnomes looking lost in a crowd of humans. (When the male gnome (played by Peter Campbell) spots his female counterpart (played by Jane Ackermann) the audience assumes he is jumping up to meet her, when all he really wants to do is snatch the bag of Doritos out of her hands. Submissions had to be 30-second long videos featuring a bag of Doritos and were judged based on originality, creativity and overall appeal to the general public. The winner will receive a million dollars, a dream job at Universal Studios and a chance to see their advertisement featured in the 2015 Superbowl.)

Nathan Cronauer, a junior environmental planning and policy major played one of the background characters in the commercial.

The contest then the Campbell's plan to donate some of the prize money to USM's music and theatre programs, especially in light of both programs recently suffering cuts. The brothers would also use the money to invest in new projects and pay their tuition.

As far as advice to aspiring filmmakers, the brothers have one thing to say: "You're probably not going to love your product when you first finish it, but that discrepancy proves that you have the taste and ability to improve. So just keep making stuff, and it will come," said Peter Campbell.

8mufnz also have a Twitter and a Facebook page to update fans on their new projects, as well as the process on the Superbowl contest. The semi-finalists will be announced and open to vote on January 5, 2015, so keep your eyes open for "The Gnome," and support your local artists. Already flitting with first place, the Campbells', as Doritos would say, "went for the bold."

arts@usmfreepress.org
@USMFreePress

Photo courtesy of Peter and Thomas Campbell

A screenshot from the 30-second video, when the male gnome gets up to steal to the female gnomes Doritos.

Dora Thompson
Free Press Staff

Carlos Andrés Gómez performs his slam poetry for students at USM.

Katelyn Wiggins / Free Press Staff

My book is a raw and intimate look at my journey, mostly stumbling through the dark of trying to figure out the riddle of manhood.

Carlos Andrés Gómez, Award-winning poet, actor and writer

Krysteana Scribner
Arts & Culture Editor

Award-winning poet, actor and writer Carlos Andrés Gómez took the stage at USM and performed a variety of his slam poetry, which focused on getting in touch with our emotions and never forgetting the beautiful moments we experience in life.

Gómez grew up believing he needed to fight, treat women as objects and close off his emotions in front of other people. It wasn't until he discovered a love for acting that he began to realize the true cost of holding back emotion. He said that this realization was one of the many moments in his life where he realized he was meant to perform as a career.

"I first got into slam poetry after watching the film Slam starring Saul Williams and Sonja Sohn. My biggest inspirations are the overlooked characters in the commer-ials and environmental planning and policy majors, especially in light of both programs recently suffering cuts. The brothers would also use the money to invest in new projects and pay their tuition. As far as advice to aspiring filmmakers, the brothers have one thing to say: "You’re probably not going to love your product when you first finish it, but that discrepancy proves that you have the taste and ability to improve. So just keep making stuff, and it will come," said Peter Campbell.

8mufnz also have a Twitter and a Facebook page to update fans on their new projects, as well as the process on the Superbowl contest. The semi-finalists will be announced and open to vote on January 5, 2015, so keep your eyes open for "The Gnome," and support your local artists. Already flitting with first place, the Campbells', as Doritos would say, "went for the bold."

arts@usmfreepress.org
@USMFreePress

Photo courtesy of Peter and Thomas Campbell

A screenshot from the 30-second video, when the male gnome gets up to steal to the female gnomes Doritos.

Dora Thompson
Free Press Staff

Carlos Andrés Gómez performs his slam poetry for students at USM.

Katelyn Wiggins / Free Press Staff

My book is a raw and intimate look at my journey, mostly stumbling through the dark of trying to figure out the riddle of manhood.

Carlos Andrés Gómez, Award-winning poet, actor and writer

Krysteana Scribner
Arts & Culture Editor

Award-winning poet, actor and writer Carlos Andrés Gómez took the stage at USM and performed a variety of his slam poetry, which focused on getting in touch with our emotions and never forgetting the beautiful moments we experience in life.

Gómez grew up believing he needed to fight, treat women as objects and close off his emotions in front of other people. It wasn’t until he discovered a love for acting that he began to realize the true cost of holding back emotion. He said that this realization was one of the many moments in his life where he realized he was meant to perform as a career.

"I first got into slam poetry after watching the film Slam starring Saul Williams and Sonja Sohn. My biggest inspirations are the overlooked poignant moments

tionships to hide how aggression dominates everyone males are taught.

Gómez has travelled to over 65 countries and explained that each one has given him a new insight on life and taught him something new.

"In each place I have travelled, I found more things I could relate to than to foreign and I am glad I got the chance to travel to the places I did," said Gómez.

One of his other works of poetry, titled "Everyting," describes what it feels like to be in love by comparing the feeling of the emotion to other pleasurable activities that and cherished memories.

Gómez slams, “You are a bowl of captain crunch cereal / that won’t end and I’m four / in a bright red onsie with a buttflap in the back / it’s a Saturday morning at seven o’clock sharp and transformers is on.” His description of love urges men to reconsider how they handle emotions and express their feelings toward their loved ones.

According to Gómez, his poetry is meant to send a message to listeners that they are powerful and beautiful. In one of his spoken-word poems, Gómez recounts a confrontation he once had and accidentally bumping into another man at a nightclub. Just as they were about to fight, Gómez’s eyes welled up with tears. Everyone on the scene jumped back as if showing vulnerability was the craziest thing Gómez could possibly have done when he was supposed to be masculine.

Gómez’s new book titled, "Man Up," urges men to break societal rules of male conformity and reconsider what it means to be a real man.

"My book is a raw and intimate look at my journey, mostly stumbling through the dark of trying to figure out the riddle of manhood," said Gómez. "Ultimately the book is my attempt at giving all people across the gender spectrum permission to access their feelings and how we might all be able to dismantle patriarchy together."
A&C Listings

Monday, November 17

Stephen King Book Signing
Books a Million Bookstore
430 Gorham Rd. South Portland
Starts: 4:00 p.m.

Tuesday, November 18

Lecture: Maine during the Civil War
Maine Historical Society
489 Congress St.
Starts: 12:00 p.m. / Ends: 1:00 p.m.

Wednesday, November 19

Luna Del Ray vs. Florence and the Machine
Empire Stadium
575 Congress St.
Starts: 10:30 p.m.

Free Clothing Store
University of Southern Maine
Woodbury Campus Center
Starts: 11:00 a.m. / Ends: 3:00 p.m.

Thursday, November 20

Monument Square Farmer’s Market
22 Monument Sq.
Starts: 7:00 a.m. / Ends: 1:00 p.m.

Friday, November 21

Hookah Fridays
The Purple Caterpillar
367 Fore St.
Starts: 6:00 p.m.

USM Royal Majesty Drag Show
Holiday Inn Hotel
88 Spring St.
Starts: 7:00 p.m.

Saturday, November 22

British Art 1400-2000: The Berger Collection
Portland Museum of Art
7 Congress St.
Starts: 1:00 p.m.

Nels Cline and Julian Lage Concert
Space Gallery
538 Congress St.
Starts: 8:00 p.m.

Lake Street Drive Concert
State Theatre
609 Congress St.
Starts: 8:00 p.m.

Sunday, November 23

Classic Album Sunday: Pink Floyd’s The Wall
Port City Music Hall
504 Congress St.
Starts: 5:00 p.m.

---

Want to submit an event? arts@usmfreepress.org

---

Beer by Bruce

Sponsored Content from Shipyard Brewing

Let’s hop to it! It’s impossible to discuss craft beer without paying homage to the hop. Although that was not the case just a short time ago when our only choices were those light or even lighter lagers (you know the ones) made by multi-national, mega-brewers (you know the ones). By and large, those beers dismiss the potential of the hop. The craft beer revolution has rectified that.

No one celebrates the virtues of the hop more than American craft brewers and no style of beer celebrates the hop more than IPAs. So let the celebrations commence! Hops are a four-for-one ingredient. They bitter the malt sweetness of beer, aiding in balance and drinkability; season the beer with hop flavor, contributing to complexity; add aromas to tantalize, entice, and ensnare the drinker to that first sip; and aid in preserving the beer. All this from the sea cones, commonly referred to as the flowers of the female hop plant.

Classified as a climbing vine of the nettle family, the hop plant is related to the Cannabis genus. Hops have a mild sedative, but not mind altering, effect. Initially the hop was used for its antiseptic powers, as they possess antibacterial compounds to help preserve beer. This is the dynamic from which IPAs were born.

The British are credited with discovering the preservation abilities of hops back in the heyday of the empire when they shipped beer to their troops in India. The long sea voyage of nearly 6 months, proved to much for the standard ale, resulting in spoiled beer. The addition of more hops combined with a higher alcoholic beer did the trick.

Since that time, the hop-centric beer has been substantially raised. Spurred on by aggressive American craft brewers, the rise of hops has led to the emergence and popularity of west coast IPAs, characterized by higher alcoholic strength and hop bitterness.

This caused a major shift in American beer markets, so much so that an arms race ensued with the mission of loading in more bittersness and alcohol. Some of these beers are quite good, even revolutionary, but others are “Shock and Awe” beers – meaning that in an effort to claim ever higher hop and alcohol levels, the balance was lost and, so too, was the drinkability.

It’s that balance, or shall we say, some counter measure in the formulation of a great IPA that prompts you to the second pint. Though you can still find those “Shock and Awe” IPAs out there, some middle ground has been found between the original English IPA and the Imperial (west coast) American IPA.

No matter where your individual hop threshold lies, there is an IPA for you. In fact, close to one third of all craft beer consumed is some version of IPA, so the hop is here to stay! This fact isn’t lost on us at Shipyard. We make a variety of IPAs in several styles for you to enjoy.

We have the traditional English IPA – Puggles IPA; an American IPA – Monkey Fist IPA; an Imperial IPA – XXXX IPA; a Black IPA – Shipyard Black IPA; and coming soon a Red Rye IPA. If you can’t make up your mind, we invite you to explore our IPA variety 12-pack. Explore, discover...share a Shipyard with someone interesting.

---

The Maine Loan

Maine’s Alternative Student Loan

NEW Lower Rates & More Flexible Loan Terms

- Range of Low Fixed Interest Rates
- Multiple Repayment Options
- Quick Online Loan Approval
- Maine-based Customer Service

www.mela.net

1-800-922-6352

---

WE HAVE OPEN POSITIONS!

For more info, go online to apply: www.usmfreepress.org/get-involved
Our opinion: Spring schedule needs to be solidified

Student walkout today in protest to recent faculty cuts

I could offer you a drug that could increase your math abilities, or help you read more quickly, or increase your reading skills, improve your concentration and short term memory, decrease your chance of getting Alzheimer’s disease, and improve your problem-solving skills and creativity, all while expanding your sphere of interaction, increasing your understanding of your native language and of your place in the world, increasing tolerance toward diversity, and finally, increasing your desirability to employers and your wage-earning potential, would you want that for yourself or for the young people in your life? Of course you would! And yet, USM has eliminated these courses.

So many USM students are concerned about when their spring semester begins. The programs that were headed. They don’t know if required classes will be offered, or if they should buy books and how classes with mastery times and dates will work around the rest of their lives.

How can students budget their time, money, and academic interests when course offerings are so uncertain?

The university should have solidified spring offerings before registration opened. While most students may be celebrating a break of sorts after registering this week, focus on the tail-end of this semester and get excited for the spring, some will be left behind and left wondering that it isn’t okay.

Why are we doing this? Students in a variety of majors are watching their degree programs—indeed their university—crumble in front of their eyes. USM students are being forced to deal with major cut, graduation plans needless complicated, and we risk losing the best faculty.

Up until now, we have been told that the board reversed the cuts, and use their influence to ensure a growing and thriving USM, instead of one that’s collapsing.

We are all walking out for our own, personal reasons. There are probably as many reasons as there are students. Perhaps you had that one inspiring conversation with a professor that really changed your career path. Or maybe you were so inspired by the faculty of USM that you cut and are unsure what graduating looks like for you. Or perhaps you were close to one of the many faculty members who have unjustly lost their position with our university. Regardless of your personal reason, it is time to come together to celebrate all the positive ways USM has shaped students, and reclaim a university that is invested in education, and not profit.

What are our own reasons for walking out today, you may ask? As students who have developed,4ed, and grown as a student and person, and I refuse to stand by and watch as our university is being turned down for a class that is invested in, education, and not profit.

I am also marching for the women and gender studies program.

I am also marching for the women and gender studies program. It was an Introduction to Women and Gender Studies class with Lorrayne Carroll that helped me develop my passion for social justice. The truth is, I am marching for every professor I have had, and all the skills and knowledge I have gained because of their dedication to the students at USM; for the diverse professors who taught me how to think and how to research, who helped explain justice, and who even somehow managed to teach me Newton’s laws of motion.

USM faculty have help me grow as a student and person, and I refuse to stand by and watch as our university is being turned down for a class that is invested in education, and not profit.

I am also marching for the women and gender studies program.

I am also marching for the women and gender studies program. It was an Introduction to Women and Gender Studies class with Lorrayne Carroll that helped me develop my passion for social justice. The truth is, I am marching for every professor I have had, and all the skills and knowledge I have gained because of their dedication to the students at USM; for the diverse professors who taught me how to think and how to research, who helped explain justice, and who even somehow managed to teach me Newton’s laws of motion.

USM faculty have help me grow as a student and person, and I refuse to stand by and watch as our university is being turned down for a class that is invested in education, and not profit.
Talking to British peers about USM and American education

Martin Conte
Free Press Staff

Let me start this update by explaining why I've chosen to discuss matters of USM, and Maine, and the United States, rather than what most of you are hoping for, that is, matters abroad. It is rare that, according to a plethora of philosophical texts and a number of the laws of physics, any event exists entirely isolated. Each action we take has reverberations, and too often it is difficult to see how far the rippling waves can travel when you're in the middle of the pond. I'm speaking to you from a position physically outside of USM, but with a heart and mind deeply invested in it. This strange threshold has allowed me to meditate on the implications of certain under goings at the university with an amount of distance from the heart of things. This is not a plea to the administration of the university. This is not a plea to the students, or the faculty, or the staff, or the Board of Trustees, or the Chancellor's Office. This is a plea to the people of Portland, and the people of the State of Maine. Invest. Whether our methods of investment into the UMaine system is a raise in taxes, or private donations, or alumni campaigns, USM needs money right now. Of that, there can be little doubt.

Tensions are high. There are two sides to this argument. There are only two sides to this argument. There is only a dedication to the future of this University. And that future, if the university is going to survive by its own self-definition, in any way more than superficial, must include the investment of the people in this state as a whole.

No one in the state is unaffected by the events going on at USM. Bleeding faculty, department, staff, majors, and students will directly impact the nature of the economy, the demographics, and the opportunities that Maine has to offer.

If we want to curb the emigration of young people from the State, we need to invest in USM. If we need to invest in USM. If we want to give Portland the national acclaim it deserves as the best city to live and work in, we need to invest in USM. If we want to protect and nurture the unique and essential Maine intellect, we need to invest in USM.

This past Wednesday night, I was invited to speak to a group of British students interested in traveling to the United States for a semester exchange. The University of Winchester has a number of relationships with American universities, including USM. I was asked to explain why I thought students should come to Maine for their experience abroad. I can tell you, the concern for the way in which our University is struggling did come to mind, and I spent some time seriously considering whether I could in good faith encourage students to come. What resulted from that consideration was a resounding yes. Looking at USM from the eyes of an outsider helped remind me, while I've been barraged by news of the civil war raging across campus, why USM is so important. Why are so many people, whether they be students protesting administrative decisions, or people sitting in those administrations themselves, care so strongly about our institution? The answer is self-evident. Going to USM is, I argue, a wholly unique experience because everyone, from your professor to the student next to you to the custodian outside, cares deeply about what the University is capable of achieving. We can build great scholars, scientists, artists, performers. We can protect our local history, and the history of those locals who've existed before us. We can enrich the growth of cultural diversity in Maine and turn it into real, significant, social change.

Up to now, the conflicts arising in USM's budgetary restraints have been presented around the notion of cutting. On one side, to oversimplify things, sits the administration, who sees the faculty as a place where financial cuts can be made. On the other side sits the faculty, who are asked to consider any and all alternative options for cuts. My question is, why talk about cuts at all? Why aren't we talking about recruitment? Why isn't every involved party volunteering to flood the local, and regional, high schools, with all these stories of the incredible courage and intellectual engagement that USM people possess? Why are we looking at a budget shortfall, and trying to shrink to meet that constraint? Why shouldn't we be seeking ways to expand to the reach that our University is capable of achieving?

When I talk to European students about American culture and identity, we wade through the usual stereotypes: McDonalds, country music, American Football, celebrity culture. But beyond that, I have often found an admiration for this definitively "American" creativity. From an early age, our education, in school and out, places a strong emphasis on individual ingenuity. We are encouraged, by our history and by our future struggles, to think outside the box. So far, it is this sort of thinking that has been absent in USM's rising difficulties.

In the classroom, as well as in conversations on campus with fellow students and alumni, I have learned how to think beyond what I believed my capacity to be. USM should do just that. When I'm asked, by either a British student considering exchange or a high school student considering higher graduation, what type of place USM is, I will tell them about the creativity, the discipline, the integrity, and the out-of-the-box perspective I have engaged with as a student. I will say so proudly. And I will continue investing in what I genuinely hope will be a bright future for the University of Southern Maine, and Maine as a whole.

Martin Conte is a senior English major currently studying abroad at the University Winchester and loving it.
Crossword
Across
1. Cowboy’s friend
2. Japanese maker of watches and calculators
3. Mythical bird
4. Comfortable state
5. Hairdresser
6. Let out
7. “Purge and Rees Feel” setting
8. Homer of old Fresno
10. Revealing kind of slip
11. Food
12. Sparkly rock
13. Public reaction test
14. Distributor of many CDs
15. French composer
16. Sell illegally, as tickets
17. Football penalty
18. Spin
19. Place to put a pimple
20. France’s Joan ___
21. Peter and Claudius
22. Feel most secure
23. Johnny Cash classic written by Shel Silverstein
24. Wool
25. Cowboys or Indians
26. Bible
27. Big ego
28. “_” lama, he’s...” Nash
29. Texas State Flower
30. Run out of cream
31. Hives
32. Affirmation
33. Follow; as advice
34. Heads, in France
35. Mapsuds.

Down
1. Beach press muscules, for short
2. Small忘记 type
3. Alphabetical quarter
4. Kid of parasites, as a pooh
5. Comic Abbr.
6. Sound of satisfaction
7. Explore, as the internet
8. Marty Feldman’s role in “Young Frankenstein”
9. NYC city on Lake Ontario
10. Exhibit A, Exhibit B, etc.
11. Mythical web-giant
12. South American valley
13. Mixed and Laurel
22. Popular pin/croc/girl chain, informally
24. Charitable relative
25. Smooch as all
27. Mexican serving
28. German playwriting mouthful
29. Russian gold medals, ___ Bulk
30. Add prep. to “up”
31. Look over tentatively
32. Sweetpea
33. Suck/digger
34. Zola uses with a perk
35. Went on and on and on and...
41. “___,” Enchanted Evening
42. Person with a handle
46. Old defense pact
47. In order to win money
48. Spy of Beethoven’s Ninth
49. Incessant
52. Legendary alter Ego
53. Mouse feeder
55. He, to Judas
57. Right, in Hermes
59. Petit-sized past
60. Network
61. English letters
64. Season, French style
65. Egyptian deity

Weekly Horoscope

Puzzles

Cryptogram
Every letter in a cryptogram stands for another letter. Use the hint to crack the code.

RK P UMPKOHBP USCHOMYUH P EJPYORKY BPQHOJQ, HSTSYQF TJE HTJQK HPORHKRF?
And here is your hint: J = E

Sudoku
A sudoku puzzle consists of a 9 × 9–square grid subdi-vided into nine 3 × 3 boxes. Some of the squares contain numbers. The object is to fill in the remaining squares so that each number 1 through 9 appears exactly once in every row, every column, and every 3 × 3 box contains each of the numbers from 1 to 9 exactly once.

The solution to last issue’s crossword

The Gold Company
Joel Gold, CFP®, Ph.D.
USM Finance Professor since 1973

I CAN HELP WITH......
1. Deciding when to retire & to help with your cash flow
2. Rolling over your retirement accounts to IRAs
3. Developing an investment portfolio flow in retirement
4. Family money issues

INVESTMENTS & FINANCIAL PLANNING –
Call 207-650-7884 or 207-934-3698
thestcompanyfinancialplanning.com

– $3.00 OFF any large pizza

Leonardo’s Pizza
415 Forest Avenue, Portland
(207) 775-4444
www.leonardosonline.com

– Award-winning pizza
– Free delivery
– 10% off with college id
– Order online

www.leonardosonline.com
Free delivery or carry out
One coupon per pizza
Expires 5/4/15

Singing and music soothe your spirits today. Attend a concert, hear an orchestra or musical perform-er, play CDs, tapes, or radio.

Independent relationships are featured today. You feel a strong need for space, or a friend or partner goes off into their own pursuits.
Community Spotlight:
Workshop teaches the benefits of going organic

David Sanok  Free Press Staff

Last Wednesday, students gathered at the USM Community Garden Soil Building Workshop to learn about organic vegetables and learn more about building garden soil and permaculture. The project began this past April with the intention of teaching students about the benefits of eating nutritious organically grown vegetables.

Many of the vegetables grown at the workshop include kale, carrots, and various fruits and herbs. Some students are also able to grow their own plants like flowers by using soil to fill newly built raised beds with affordable materials that will break down and provide a healthy soil. The group of USM gardeners are using this program to learn how to grow fresh organic plants for the next spring and is used as a learning tool by the instructors to help students create a sustainable garden.

Stephanie Britta, a sophomore psychology major, has been in this lab since April and joined to maintain her agrarian lifestyle. “I grew up in a farm when I was a kid,” said Britta. “When I become a teenager, I started working on other farms during high school to gain more experience.”

But after Britta came to USM last fall, she said that she found it difficult to adjust to the cheap and processed food served at USM.

According to Britta, the benefits of organic food include higher levels of vitamins, antioxidants, carbohydrates, and proteins which help lead to better fitness. Vegetables that are sprayed with pesticides and cows that are fed grain rather than grass contain less of these ingredients that can lead to weight gain problems. “I always ate organic food that was grown on a farm and never the processed food from supermarket,” said Britta. “If I ever have a burger or steak, I always buy from farmer’s markets where the cows were grass fed and not grain fed. I also make sure the fruits and vegetables I buy are not sprayed with pesticides and were made local.”

Although she bought organic food instead of eating on campus, Britta still wanted to find a way to continue growing her own organic food at college. That’s when Britta found the office of sustain ability.

“When I came to USM last year, I started working for Tyler Kidd, the coordinator of the office of sustainability, where I got involved in recycling and composting food. She recommended this workshop to me as not only a way to get involved in gardening again and grow my own organic food, but also to meet other students who share the interest in practicing an organic diet.”

As a health science major, studying nutrition is part of Britta’s major and is something she wants to pursue as a career. “I want to live off the grid after I graduate and get into the medicine aspect of nutrition,” said Britta.

“I’ll certainly continue gardening after I graduate, but I don’t think I’ll start a farm,” Britta also feels that she will be making more of a difference in people’s lives by educating people about the benefits of healthy food. “I don’t think there’s enough young people out there who know about organic food and how healthy it is,” said Britta.

“I think if more people know about organic food and there’s a bigger push for more healthy meals in our schools, kids will come to love it and grow up healthier into their adulthood.”

At the end of this month, members of the workshop will shut down gardening for the year by covering up the beds with newspapers. This is done to preserve the compost soil for the winter so the soil can be used again for next spring when workshop will resume gardening.

news@usmfreepress.org  USMFreePress

Nearly 200 people gather for vigil in honor of Portland fire victims

Seth Koenig  BDN Staff

PORTLAND, Maine — Nearly 200 people gathered at Portland’s Longfellow Park on Tuesday night for a vigil to remember the six people who died this month just a short day, Nov. 1, the morning after residents from his injuries three days later. Summers of Rockland, leapt from a kid’s said Britta. “When I got known the beneficiary of the community’s effort to establish a task force to respond to similar tragedies.”

A sixth victim, 29-year-old Steven Summers of Rockland, leapt from the upper floors of the 94-year-old building to escape. He was hospitalized with severe burns and died from his injuries three days later.

Seven others who were at the house when the fire broke out escaped. Allen Ewing-Merrill, co-pastor of the United Methodist Church HopeGateWay, said Tuesday he knows one of the survivors. About 50 people gathered at HopeGateWay late Tuesday afternoon to decorate prayer or hope bags before walking to the nearby park for the evening vigil.

“Our window looks right out onto that house, and it’s pretty horrifying to think about what happened there and the people who didn’t get out,” Ewing-Merrill said. “But I also believe in the triumph of love over the darkness and the triumph of hope over despair.”

Portland Police Officer Alissa Poisson was one of the public safety personnel who went to the fire scene Nov. 1. She joined with others at HopeGateWay to paint a prayer flag.

“The amount of loss in just a matter of minutes really had an impact on the officers and responders who were at the scene,” she said. “We’re trying to be there for each other. It’s more loss than we’re used to in just a moment’s time.”

Carol Schiller, head of the area’s University Neighborhood Organization, called the tragedy “a profound loss for all of us.”

“I enjoyed seeing Ashley and Nikki and their little dog, Daisy, in the park,” she said during the Tuesday night vigil. “They brought vibrancy to our neighborhood.”

Luminary votive bags lined the perimeter of the park and speakers at the vigil lit seven candles representing love, joy, memories, tears, hope, peace and strength. Laurie Whittemore, local volunteer chaplain for the American Red Cross, read the names of the victims, each one punctuated by a gong.

In the aftermath of the fire, the city of Portland announced the establishment of a task force to review staffing levels and inspection processes. The announcement came Friday, when the city released a record of multiple complaints against the 20-24 Noyes St. building, specifically in the last 11 years, including several by neighbors concerned about accumulations of “trash and combustibles” around the property.

A 2013 consultant’s review of the University’s fire prevention and safety measures punctuated by a gong.

Nearly 200 people attended a vigil Tuesday night in Longfellow Park in Portland, not far from where a Nov. 1 fire claimed the lives of six people.

20-24 Noyes St. building, specifically in the last 11 years, including several by neighbors concerned about accumulations of “trash and combustibles” around the property.

A 2013 consultant’s review of the University’s fire prevention and safety measures.

Nearly 200 people attended a vigil Tuesday night in Longfellow Park in Portland, not far from where a Nov. 1 fire claimed the lives of six people.

From the BDN

Seth Koenig

Nearly 200 people gather for vigil in honor of Portland fire victims

20-24 Noyes St. building, specifically in the last 11 years, including several by neighbors concerned about accumulations of “trash and combustibles” around the property.

A 2013 consultant’s review of the University’s fire prevention and safety measures.

Nearly 200 people attended a vigil Tuesday night in Longfellow Park in Portland, not far from where a Nov. 1 fire claimed the lives of six people.

5,000 building and apartment buildings that should have them. Portland’s Inspections Division includes just four inspectors, only one of whom is designated to respond to complaints like those lodged against 20-24 Noyes St. and conducted 850 such inspections last year.

A 2013 consultant’s review of the Portland Fire Department recommendations.”

The victims of the fire have been identified as tenants David Bragdon Jr., 27, Ashley Thomas, 29, and Nicole Finlay, 26, as well as visitors to the building Christopher Conlee, 25, of Portland and Maelisha Jackson, 23, of Topsham.

“Mourners may have been over 200 people gathered at Portland’s Longfellow Park on Tuesday night for a vigil to remember the six people who died this month just a short day, Nov. 1, the morning after residents from his injuries three days later. Summers of Rockland, leapt from a kid’s said Britta. “When I got known the beneficiary of the community’s effort to establish a task force to respond to similar tragedies.”

A sixth victim, 29-year-old Steven Summers of Rockland, leapt from the upper floors of the 94-year-old building to escape. He was hospitalized with severe burns and died from his injuries three days later.

Seven others who were at the house when the fire broke out escaped. Allen Ewing-Merrill, co-pastor of the United Methodist Church HopeGateWay, said Tuesday he knows one of the survivors. About 50 people gathered at HopeGateWay late Tuesday afternoon to decorate prayer or hope bags before walking to the nearby park for the evening vigil.

“Our window looks right out onto that house, and it’s pretty horrifying to think about what happened there and the people who didn’t get out,” Ewing-Merrill said. “But I also believe in the triumph of love over the darkness and the triumph of hope over despair.”

Portland Police Officer Alissa Poisson was one of the public safety personnel who went to the fire scene Nov. 1. She joined with others at HopeGateWay to paint a prayer flag.

“The amount of loss in just a matter of minutes really had an impact on the officers and responders who were at the scene,” she said. “We’re trying to be there for each other. It’s more loss than we’re used to in just a moment’s time.”

Carol Schiller, head of the area’s University Neighborhood Organization, called the tragedy “a profound loss for all of us.”

“I enjoyed seeing Ashley and Nikki and their little dog, Daisy, in the park,” she said during the Tuesday night vigil. “They brought vibrancy to our neighborhood.”

Luminary votive bags lined the perimeter of the park and speakers at the vigil lit seven candles representing love, joy, memories, tears, hope, peace and strength. Laurie Whittemore, local volunteer chaplain for the American Red Cross, read the names of the victims, each one punctuated by a gong.

In the aftermath of the fire, the city of Portland announced the establishment of a task force to review staffing levels and inspection processes. The announcement came Friday, when the city released a record of multiple complaints against the 20-24 Noyes St. building, specifically in the last 11 years, including several by neighbors concerned about accumulations of “trash and combustibles” around the property.

A 2013 consultant’s review of the University’s fire prevention and safety measures.

Nearly 200 people attended a vigil Tuesday night in Longfellow Park in Portland, not far from where a Nov. 1 fire claimed the lives of six people.

5,000 building and apartment buildings that should have them. Portland’s Inspections Division includes just four inspectors, only one of whom is designated to respond to complaints like those lodged against 20-24 Noyes St. and conducted 850 such inspections last year.

A 2013 consultant’s review of the Portland Fire Department recommendations.”

The victims of the fire have been identified as tenants David Bragdon Jr., 27, Ashley Thomas, 29, and Nicole Finlay, 26, as well as visitors to the building Christopher Conlee, 25, of Portland and Maelisha Jackson, 23, of Topsham.
November 17, 2014

Movement Mondays
4:15 p.m. to 5:15 p.m.
The Multipurpose Room, Sullivan Fitness & Recreation Complex, Portland

Glow Flow Yoga
7:00 p.m. to 8:00 p.m.
Multipurpose room, Sullivan Gym, Portland

Tuesday, November 18

Rusty Rocket in Full Dome!
1:00 p.m. to 2:00 p.m.
Southworth Planetarium, Portland

Free Clothing Store
11:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m.
Woodbury Campus Center Amphitheater, Portland

Wednesday, November 19

Chill The Eff Out Wednesday
12:00 p.m. to 4:00 p.m.
The Wellness Center, Woodbury Campus Center, Portland

Commuter Connections
12:00 p.m. to 1:00 p.m.
The Wellness Center, Woodbury Campus Center, Portland

Students of Economic Interest Meeting
3:00 p.m. to 4:00 p.m.
Room 520, Glickman Library, Portland

Dance night
8:00 p.m. to 10:00 p.m.
Brooks Student Center, Portland

Thursday, November 20

2014 Husky Harvest Festival
10:00 a.m. to 2:00 p.m.
Woodbury Campus Center, Portland

Genocide and ME: Shining the Light of Truth
5:30 p.m. to 7:30 p.m.
Hannaford Hall, Abromson Center, Portland

Jazz Ensemble
7:30 p.m.
Corthell Concert Hall, Gorham

Philantrophy PINGO
9:00 p.m.
Brooks Student Center, Portland

Friday, November 21

Muslim Student Association
1:00 p.m. to 2:00 p.m.
Woodbury Campus Center Conference Room, Portland

Student Senate Meeting
1:00 p.m. to 3:00 p.m.
Room 406, Bailey Hall, Gorham

15th Annual Royal Majesty Drag Show
7:00 p.m. to 10:00 p.m.
Holiday Inn by the Bay, Spring Street, Portland

For more events: www.usm.maine.edu/events

---

USM raised the POW/MIA flag on Veteran’s Day last week.

---

HELP WANTED

Pearl Ultra Nightclub & Pearl Tap House are seeking: Waitresses - Coat Check - Shot Girls
(Experience preferred but not required.)

Pearl Ultra Nightclub
442 Fore St
207-523-9600
Portland, ME

Pearl Tap House
446 Fore St
How do you tell stories?

No matter your medium, we're always looking for good storytellers. Apply to be a reporter, columnist, photographer, designer or copy editor today on The Free Press website.