Biographical Sketch

Jean Byers Sampson was born in Somerville, Massachusetts in 1923. She graduated from Smith College with a B.A. in History in 1944. The following year she was hired by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) in New York City to research and write a special report, "A Study of the Negro in Service," sponsored by the U.S. Department of Defense. Published in 1947, this report contributed to President Harry Truman's decision to desegregate the armed forces.

Sampson moved to Maine in the early 1950s with her husband, Richard Sampson, a Bates College mathematics professor, and she played a unique and critical role in the state until her death in 1996. Over the course of her life in Maine, she served as the founder of the first chapter of the NAACP in Maine, local and state chair of the League of Women Voters, a member of the Maine State Board of Education, and executive director of the Maine Civil Liberties Union, among other roles. At the national level, she was founder and director of "Catalyst in Education," an organization which assisted adult women with education and training to enter the work force.

Sampson served as a member and subsequent chair of the University of Maine System Board of Trustees. As chair of the Board in 1974, she supported the right of gay students to hold a conference on the University of Maine campus. Consequently, Governor James Longley asked all members of the Board to resign, and Sampson led the Board in refusing to do so. As a result of this action, she and the Board received the Andrew Meiklejohn Award, presented by the American Association of University Professors in recognition of an outstanding contribution to academic freedom. Sampson was also a member of the Bowdoin College Board of Overseers and Board of Trustees.

Jean Byers Sampson believed deeply in the right of all people to a free and unbiased life, and she devoted her adult life to that accomplishment. The Jean Byers Sampson Center for Diversity in Maine is named in honor of her commitment.

Description of the Papers

The Papers document Sampson’s professional work and community service in organizations that supported civil rights, education and academic freedom, and developing opportunities for minorities and women. They contain administrative materials and official publications related to specific organizations with which Sampson was affiliated, as well as personal correspondence, reports, and speeches written by Sampson. The Papers also document family and personal activities, largely through correspondence and extensive scrapbooks kept by Sampson. The series distinction in the arrangement of the Papers is guided by Sampson’s own separation between “professional” and “community service” involvement, as indicated by her resume. As such, organizations she participated in through salaried positions are grouped separately from those she worked with in philanthropic roles. This arrangement was also suggested by the papers as received.

The Papers include materials related to Sampson’s work with the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) such as correspondence and clippings related to her early study of African Americans in the military, as well as correspondence, membership lists, and other documents about the Maine branch of the NAACP in Lewiston-Auburn during the 1960s. This section includes a transcript of an interview of Sampson about her involvement with the NAACP, and the civil rights movement in Maine (Box 2, Folder 11).

From the late 1970s to the 1990s, Sampson worked with the Maine Civil Liberties Union, and the Papers include minutes, correspondence, and other internal business documents related to this organization. The Papers also include publications by the MCLU on variety of topics including prison issues, constitutional rights, and education. Sampson served on the Financial Structures Committee of the American Civil Liberties Union, and materials related to this service are contained in Series 2.6.

Sampson’s work in education was multifaceted, and the Papers contain materials related to several different educational organizations that she worked with. The Career Opportunities Program (funded by the US Office of Education), under aegis of the University of Maine, trained lower income people for positions in the public school system in Lewiston. Records consist of internal working documents, such as minutes of meetings, and printed material about this federal Program. Catalyst in Education was an organization that developed programs to train and employ women in the teaching profession. Along with the correspondence and memorandum reflecting the group's mission this section contains printed directories by Catalyst of preparatory programs and teaching opportunities. Two other sub-series, Education Profession Development Act and Institute for Responsive Education, contain documentation for education initiatives that Sampson worked for, one on the development of the education profession and the other on standardized achievement tests.

Sampson's career with the State Court Mediation Service in the Lewiston area is documented through internal correspondence, case files, and printed material. There is brief documentation on the League of Women Voters during the 1950s when Sampson was most actively involved in its Maine chapter.

A sub-series on the University of Maine System includes materials related to the Maine Management and Cost Survey of the mid-1970s, meetings of the Board of Trustees, and information about the controversial Wilde-Stein Conference of 1974, for which Sampson and the Board of Trustees defended the right of Gay and Lesbian groups to host and participate in this conference on the University campus. This series also includes clippings and correspondence regarding the opinions of James B. Longley both before and during his years as Governor. A sub-series on Bowdoin College primarily documents the workings of the Board of Trustees including their minutes for 1988-95, which appear to be fairly inclusive.

The Papers contain several manuscripts and publications by Sampson, including "A Study of the Negro in Military Service" (1950, Box 1, Folder 2), "The Part-Time Assignment of Women in Teaching" (1965, Box 8, Folder 74), "Partnerships: New Weapon Against Teacher Shortage" (1967, Box 8, Folder 77), and "A Guide for Parents on Standardized Testing" (1977, Box 4, Folder 28). Some of the most important documents in the collection reflecting her thoughts and beliefs are Sampson's notes for speeches she presented to a variety of educational, political, and civil rights groups, which are dispersed throughout the Papers.

The papers are organized into three series:

Series 1. Professional

This series is divided into the following seven sub-series: National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Catalyst in Education Program, Lewiston Career Opportunities Program, Education Professions Development Act, Institute for Responsive Education, Maine Civil Liberties Union, and Senator George J. Mitchell Office.

Series 2. Community Service

This series is divided into the following nine sub-series: League of Women Voters, United States Commission on Civil Rights, University of Maine System, Maine

Department of Education, Bowdoin College, American Civil Liberties Union, Maine Court Mediation Service, Other Civic Engagement, and Awards and Honors.

Series 3. Personal

This series contains extensive correspondence written by Jean Byers Sampson to her family, photographs of Sampson, several resumes and professional inquiries, and assorted financial materials and receipts. Folder 134 contains materials related to Smith College Reunions and class news. Folder 135 contains a short obituary and other memorial materials. Folders 136-164 contain the pages of eight scrapbooks that Jean kept during her lifetime, which include clippings, playbills, and other mementos about her life, travel, leisure, and children. For conservation reasons, newspaper clippings and other fragile papers were photocopied onto preservation bond and the scrapbooks (some of which were falling apart) were disassembled but marked to preserve their original arrangement.

Series 4. Restricted

This series consists of materials restricted from public access to guard the privacy of individuals. Listed within their regular series, they are included here to give their physical location. Materials include lists of organization members with addresses, phone numbers, and email addresses; correspondence with email addresses; and personal and contact information of extended family members.

Series 5. Oversize

This series contains materials too large or bulky to fit into regular boxes. Listed within their regular series, they are included here to give their physical location. Materials are primarily related to awards and honors received by Sampson. Several folders containing scrapbook pages are also located in oversize storage.
