C. P. TAYLOR

C. P. Taylor was one of the most remarkable playwrights of his generation in Britain. In a short playwriting career of less than twenty years, he wrote over fifty plays. Prolific by almost any twentieth century standards he combined this output with a programme of work to help others, which included workshops for people with severe learning difficulties, literary directorship of regional repertory theatres, leadership of youth theatre projects, and writers seminars for aspiring colleagues. Born in Glasgow, he spent much of his life in rural Northumberland. He enjoyed a close relationship with the Traverse Theatre in Edinburgh, where his professional writing career began. But it was on Tyneside where his impact was most profound. Working with the Newcastle based Live Theatre Company, he became one of the pioneers of community theatre in Britain, writing for audiences who avoided conventional theatre venues, but who enjoyed the challenge of live performance.

London and New York caught up with Cecil Taylor very late in his career, most notably through 'Bandits', a political thriller based in the gangland of the north-east during the 1960s, and 'Good', the play you are due to see tonight. It was produced by the R.S.C. in London, and about to open in New York at the time of the writer's death in 1981.
