UMP B'S NIP ST. FRANCIS JV'S

The UMP B squad playing a nip and tuck game with St. Francis held a 33-28 lead at half time. After the two clubs traded baskets, one would go ahead and then the other. As it came down to the wire with 10 seconds remaining, the game was tied 58 all. Davis, the hero of the day, swished a 10 foot jumper to clinch it for the B's with 2 seconds remaining. The inbound play resulted in two more for the B's making the final tally 62-58.

Bob Curry and Tom Trufant paced the B's with 15 points apiece with Davis and Small who had 8 and 7 respectively.

Lombardo had the game high of 21 points in a losing cause. Brazier posted 14 to be the only other St. Francis man in double figures.

Respectfully,

EDITORIAL--

Have you noticed? Since the beginning of this semester, the UMPus has been a bit lacking in the new department. Some of you may not remember why and when the UMPus was created—but think a little and you will.

To refresh your memory a little, the purpose of the UMPus was, and still is, to provide the students with a means to publicly air their complaints, likes, and dislikes.

Since we have not received any news pertaining to the preceding items, we naturally assume that every single person in the whole school is happy with every single thing that is going on. And from this we can assume that there is no longer a need for the UMPus. Are we right?

DEBATING TEAM

The following members of the debating team will be competing at Orono on Wednesday, February 19: John McClure, Michael Pearce, Carol Chapman, Charles Hayes, and Ruth Dodge.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS CLUB

On Monday, February 17, Yakov Aviad, Consul of Israel, spoke at a forum at UMP. Mr. Aviad spoke and answered questions on Modern Israel.

During the discussion following Mr. Aviad's address, Ramzi Karam presented the viewpoint of the Arab refugees who had lost their homes when the Israeli government took over coastal Palestine.

A FRIGHTENING WAY TO STUDY (ACP)

Steve Quan, a young man who devised an ingenious plan on his way to becoming a genius, won't change that plan no matter what.

Steve inadvertently started a bomb scare at the University of Southern California when he left his time safe in use in the Science Library. While he was gone from the main library, someone telephoned officials there and reported a bomb within its confines.

The library was evacuated and a police bomb squad moved in to find a ticking device which was removed to the Coliseum. Later, the squad learned it was Steve's time safe, designed to thwart temptations that could interfere with his studies.

Steve had set the timer on his safe, which contained his carfare and dinner money, for 5 p.m., to assure uninterrupted concentration—even if he happened to get hungry or decide to knock off and go home.

A week has passed. Steve is not the least bit enthralled by all the publicity. By now, in fact, he is sick of it, and he'd like to return to concentration on trigonometry, algebra, history and two chemistry courses.

"Was a regular user of USC's library facilities, I was disgusted by the waste of time and money caused by the incident," said Steve. He said he does not know who called the university to set off the scare but he wants to express apologies to any students whose studies were disrupted.

Steve said he plans to keep on using campus libraries and his 32-pound safe, which he dreamed up last summer as a study aid which successfully keeps his mind on his studies.
