STUDENT LEADERS

A representative group of students leaders have been invited to a supper meeting in Orono on Sunday, March 13. Mr. Van Amburg has been invited and will accompany Estelle Watson, Jean Dickson, Walt Abbott, Sue Rosen, Sally Butterworth, Janie Jacobs, Charlie Griffin and Rick Bowie. Each one has been encouraged to bring any problems or suggestions to the meeting.

S.S. GRIPSE SESSION WEDNESDAY

Due to the many misunderstandings about voicing opinion at the Student Senate's open meeting, the Senate has decided to resume the once extinct "gripe session." The "gripe session" will be held in Bonney Hall auditorium, Wednesday from 12-2 p.m. or as long as someone is there. Here's your big chance to air all your complaints and offer all your suggestions.

SOPHOMORE CLASSES

The officers and representatives of UMP's sophomore class have been invited to Orono for the Sophomore Class Banquet. Dr. Richard G. Emerick, associate professor of Anthropology will speak. Gary Coyne, Janie Jacobs and Sue Fiske will represent UMP at the 6:30 banquet.

IMTRAMURALS FOR WOMEN

We're sure that many of the women at UMP have long wondered about the dearth of athletic opportunities here for women. It seems that the lack of any athletic program is mainly the result of the poor initiative and interest of the girls themselves.

Since UMP does not have adequate gym facilities, the only time that women can use the gym is on the off hours when there are no men's gym activities scheduled. The gym was opened a number of times this year for the women to use playing basketball; but after an initially good turnout, attendance dwindled to a handful.

INSIDE SPORTS

Rudyard Kipling once wrote a poem describing the qualities and characteristics of a man. He titled the poem "IF". Many college students have labeled this poem "idealistic", "unrealistic", "impossible", etc. Bill Bradley, a scholar and famous athlete while at Princeton and now a Rhodes Scholar at Oxford, knows the words to "IF" and thinks they should be set to music.

Bradley passed up many thousands of dollars to play basketball for Ned Irish's New York Nickerbookers in order to accept a $2520 scholarship at Oxford. He feels that basketball was a "phase" that he must pass through, just as Oxford is today. Bradley feels that one should apply himself and live, not just exist, but live in all senses of the word. In a world filled with interesting things, the trick is not to miss too much in passing.

Bradley realizes that basketball, in part, molded his character and opened some doors for him — although one Oxford committee member asked him, "Have you ever played any sports?"

At Oxford's read-it-yourself philosophy, he is concentrating his efforts in things seem to be happening in a flash, and thinks they should be set to music.

The last meeting of El Circulo Espanol included a Spanish skit, a letter from Donorita Tsigic Maria Alfarco who is an exchange student at Belfast from Costa Rica, and a report from Venezuela. Things seem to be happening fast and furiou.s in the club. The next meeting will be held on April 1, and is open to anyone.

STUDENT SENATE MEETING

The Student Senate met Tuesday and went through the usual roll call, secretary's report, treasurer's report, requests for money and committee reports. Of special note is that there will be no classes held April 21st due to President Sullivan's inauguration and that the chaperone situation will remain as is.

Unfinished business was taken up with Walt Abbott enlightening the Senate on his theory of capitalistic society. A letter will be sent to Mr. Lawrence in regards to lighting the walks, in hopes that some action will be taken even if it's hanging a few Japanese lanterns. In regard to the library noise, Mark Eastman reported that persistent offenders will be sent to the Dean for discipline. And on and on from Longfellow's statue to the parking lot situation.

Under new business there was a favorable over the last week's open meeting. Pat Feury made a motion that

Athletic director James Sullivan told us that he would be glad to give out equipment for girls softball, if there was enough interest. There's no reason why a group of women couldn't together, form a couple of teams, and compete even an informal basis. An even more unorganized sport would be archery. The school has the equipment and would let an interested group use it.

One look at the men's intramural program would show the interest and enjoyment that the men receive from non-varsity athletics. There must be many women who would like to have something to do around here but study and sit in the caf.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

To the editor of the UMPus

Regarding the section of the "Inside Sports" column of Feb. 23 and Mar. 2 concerning whether athletes can be intellectuals: first of all, I disagree with the English Prof. from U. of Calif. that interest in sports is bad and that athletes cannot make any intellectual contributions in class.

I do agree that to a certain extent team sports like football or basketball do tend to stifle individualism and to prevent a person from becoming an intellectual. Exceptions like Bill Bradley are very few and far between.

However, for sports like track, swimming, tennis, and gymnastics, where the individual is more or less on his own, I cannot see how any intellectualism would be stifled. I am not saying that we should do away with football and basketball (because I enjoy these sports as much as the next guy), but I am saying that it is highly unlikely to find any intellectuals connected with them.

Now, regarding intellectual athletes at UMP: it is my opinion, based on the above explanation, there are no intellectual athletes in any sports at UMP. There are a few very smart athletes who get very high grades, but they would not be considered intellectuals, at least not in the usual meaning of the word. There are very few intellectuals in this neck of the woods anyway, but as time goes by, there will be more, including possibly some of these smart athletes.

I would be very interested to hear more on this from Mr. Abbott, the Commissioner, and "the intellectual athlete."

New Look for the Lounge

When LBH was opened in September, one particular part of this building was nothing but sheer disappointment - the student lounge. The walls were painted battleship gray, and the tall vending machines stood like mechanical robots against this drab background. The only good part of this room was the furniture which was a decent color and surprisingly enough - comfortable! But even this furniture did not serve to brighten up the lounge and give it a relaxing atmosphere.

However, along came second semester and with it - a new look for the lounge.

Recently, an UMPus reporter ambled down to the lounge and found a change. The walls are now a bright canary yellow with matching waste-vaskets.

Information from various reliable sources (i.e. Student Senate President) around UMP reveal that the lounge will also have three rugs - two of the same color and one of a contrasting color. The vending machines will be raised on a platform from the floor, and will have a piece built on top of them to give the machines the effect of being built into the wall.

Mrs. Barrows art class (Art 2) is also working diligently to complete a mural on the wall across from the doorway to the lounge. The mural will be a typical Maine waterfront scene.

We don't want to sound sarcastic or wishy-washy, but since the school has put so much work and money into making the lounge a better place for relaxation, we think it would be a good idea to be just a bit more thoughtful than in the past. It doesn't take but an extra 10 or 15 seconds to walk to the waste receptors and dispose of coffee cups, cracker wrappers, candy and gum wrappers; and with new rugs, no one wants to see big coffee and coke stains. It's your lounge, and it will be only as clean as you make it!
