ME Gay Rights Opponents Collect Enough Signatures

by Glenn Adams

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP) — Saying it was a miracle they reached their goal, gay rights foes announced Thursday they had more than enough signatures to force a referendum on a new law barring discrimination against homosexuals.

“It’s a miracle of God,” Michael Heath, executive director of the Christian Civic League of Maine, said as he stood behind five cardboard boxes full of petitions.

A chorus of “Amen” arose from the two dozen petition volunteers standing behind Heath at a State House news conference. Once the petitions were checked over by state election officials, the gay rights law that is supposed to take effect Friday was put on hold.

Gays, who were overjoyed when the law was enacted and signed by Gov. Angus King earlier this year, were angered over the state gathered developments, said an activist.

In 1995, Maine voters "people's veto" referendum and "special rights to homosexuals" said Heath.

A leader of the Maine Lesbian-Gay Political Alliance said she was surprised the opponents were able to round up the signatures they needed, but remained confident that voters will uphold the law when they vote on it at a special election on a yet-unspecified date after November but before next April.

“The reality is we’ve proven our case over a number of years,” said Karen Geraghty, a former president of the alliance.

“I’m angry because we have to go through another referendum, and I’m disappointed because groups of fundamental Christians are unwilling to accept that the law has been (enacted),” she said.

State election officials have 30 days to certify there are enough valid signatures to force the referendum. If they find fewer than 51,131 signatures are valid, the gay rights law will take effect the following day, said Secretary of State Dan Gwadosky. Otherwise, the law will be on hold pending the outcome of the referendum.

In 1995, Maine voters narrowly defeated a referendum plan to bar anti-discrimination protection for homosexuals. The proposal sought to limit local and state civil rights protections to age, sex, religion and seven other categories already in the Maine Human Rights Act.

Give Children Hope

by Chelsea Mooser

World AIDS day this year will be focusing on children I used to think that meant to children living with the disease, eight months ago I learned it also means something totally different. I left for Zimbabwe in January of 1997.

I prepared myself to work on an AIDS study in a country with one of the highest rates of infection in the world. In Zimbabwe I worked with Dr. Geoff Foster, a local pediatrician, and a team of Africa University students to learn more about child-headed households.

Our job was to access the living conditions and coping mechanisms of children who's parents had died of AIDS. We would travel to rural areas to interview children sometimes as young as twelve who had stepped out of the role of "child" and into the role of "parent."

The children I met were strong, they had been through more than I can imagine. Some of the children were hopeful for the future, some couldn’t see beyond that day.

At first I was surprised at how well these children seemed to be coping. They just kept living I guess they had no choice. There was no longer anywhere for them to turn to.

The first weekend we drove out to St. Agustines, a mission community to practice the interview. The children were hopeful for the future, some couldn’t see beyond that day.

The drive was about fifteen minutes from the paved road. We got out at the village center which was no more than the school and the health clinic. It was the kind of Zimbabwe I had pictured and I felt like your typical American going off to get the “African Experience.”

A local kid who lived in St. Agustines led me and my research partners, Darlington and Kundai to the household we were to interview. The walk was about fifteen kilometers and took us two and a half hours. We crossed four rivers, scurried up mountains and through jungle like vegetation. It was more walking than I had done in months.

I tried to imagine what it must be like to have to make that walk every morning for school but I was too tired to think about it. The first household we went to consisted of three huts. I felt like I was in a documentary and the woman speaking to us in Shona should have subtitles below her head.

She was an old woman caring for her seven grandchildren. It was a small room we were sitting in she told us the other rooms were falling down and this is where they lived.

She was an old woman caring for her seven grandchildren. It was a small room we were sitting in she told us the other rooms were falling down and this is where they lived. There was a small fire in the center which filled the room with smoke and heat. There was a broken bed across the room and I wondered who slept there.

Above the bed was a row of shelves housing a few cups with some ripped up newspaper underneath them. There was nothing to do, no books no nothing. Only the seven children and their grandmother preparing a pot of pumpkin leaves for dinner.

The harvest was late to come, she explained, and they wouldn't have maize for a while yet. This was their life at that moment I felt so lucky I realized how much I had.

There was a boy who was probably my age who had bad asthma which he couldn't fight, he lived in this smoky room and wasn't getting better. He was probably going to die. I was sitting there listening to him talk but I knew that in two years he'll probably be dead.

These seven children had watched their father die of AIDS and their mother disappear.

I can't understand what would lead a mother to run away from her children but I don't understand her life either. For us in the States, and the middle-class Zimbabweans, life is about living well but for these seven children and their grandmother, life was just about living.

We finished up the interview and walked back towards the village, towards our truck, towards our perfect lives. We continued to do interviews for a few months, gathering data from hundreds of children around eastern Zimbabwe.

The children had different ways of coping with life. Some had jobs, some depended on fields of maize planted by their parents. Life was tougher for children in the less fertile areas. They would often report going to bed hungry two or more nights a week.

Most of the children didn't have shoes and they all thanked us profusely for the small bag of beans we would give them as we left. During these months AIDS became real to me. Not as a medical problem or a political issue, but as just another hard thing piled onto the life of children throughout Zimbabwe and the rest of the world.

Before I went to Zimbabwe I didn't know much about AIDS. I only saw the doctor talking about "the cure" while passing out condoms and the s-e.-months didn't really understand. I've realized that there is really no way to put AIDS down on paper. It can't be explained and it can't be justified. No matter how political or medical it becomes in the United States there are still "victims" like the children I met in Zimbabwe. For them it's just the way it is.
Court Rules: Ban on Gay Group From Public Facility

TOKYO (AP) In a victory for gay rights in Japan, Tokyo's highest court Tuesday upheld a lower court ruling that said city officials were wrong to bar a gay group from using a public facility.

The education division of the Tokyo-city government refused in 1990 to let the Association for the Lesbian and Gay Movement, known as OCCUR, stay in a city-run youth lodge.

It said that because they were gay, using the facilities would violate the spirit of a rule prohibiting members of the opposite sex from sharing rooms. It said the prospect of a homosexual group having sex in the lodge would bother other guests.

Tokyo High Court Judge Hideichi Yazaki, ruling Tuesday on an appeal by the Tokyo government, said that what they did was discriminatory and illegal, and that they cannot continue to be indifferent toward or ignorant about homosexuals and other minority groups.

The ruling basically upheld one by the Tokyo District Court in 1994, though the high court more clearly prohibited Tokyo from discriminating against gays. "It was a huge victory for us," said Masaki Inaba, a spokesperson for OCCUR.

"It's great that we won but more needs to be done to end discrimination against homosexuals."

OCCUR had originally asked for dlrs 6.5 million yen (dlrs 54,000) to compensate for defamatory remarks allegedly made by city officials and youth center workers.

"When the Lord speaks to us, he speaks to our spirits if we have no body at all," Jensen said Saturday. "When the adversary speaks to us, he speaks to the flesh. All of the appetites, all of the passions are to enslave us."

About 300 gay men and women gathered with their families to listen to Jensen and participate in workshops with titles such as "Resisting the Struggle and the Temptations," and "Meeting Female Emotional Needs."

The conference was sponsored by Evergreen International, a group of therapists committed to the principles of "reparative" or "conversion" therapy to try to change gays into heterosexuals.

Evergreen is not a Mormon Church organization, but the group sustains the doctrines and standards of the church "without reservation or exception."

For years, the reparative approach described by Jensen has been discredited by most mainstream therapists.

The American Psychological Association the leading society of psychologists passed a resolution in August aimed at limiting the controversial practice of reparative therapy. It said there was no scientific proof that such therapy works and some potential for harm.

"This is a welcome addition from the scientific community to the condemnation of these anti-gay efforts," Judith Schaeffer, deputy legal director of People for the American Way, a Washington-based civil rights organization told The Washington Post. "The idea that homosexuality is a condition from which one should be cured is old-fashioned bigotry passing as science."

But groups such as Evergreen disagree.

"Evergreen attests that individuals can overcome homosexual behavior and can diminish same-sex attraction," according to the group's mission statement. "Evergreen provides education, guidance and support to those involved in the transition from homosexuality."

The organization offers support groups, group counseling and sponsors sports activities. Evergreen organizers believe that sports are key. Many sexually confused men never were good at team sports and were teased for being sissies, they argue. Mastering baseball and basketball promotes masculine self-esteem and helps men see other males as pals, instead of potential sexual partners.

Church Official Advocates "Cure" for Homosexuality

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) A Mormon Church leader advocated a controversial form of therapy for homosexuals by suggesting they immerse themselves in the doctrines of the church to heal them of the sin of same-sex attraction.

Jay E. Jensen, a member of the First Quorum of Seventy in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, said gays must allow the faith's theology to "inoculate" them against homosexuality.

"When the Lord speaks to us, he speaks to our spirits if we have no body at all," Jensen said Saturday. "When the adversary speaks to us, he speaks to the flesh. All of the appetites, all of the passions are to enslave us."

About 300 gay men and women gathered with their families to listen to Jensen and participate in workshops with titles such as "Resisting the Struggle and the Temptations," and "Meeting Female Emotional Needs."

Mixed Message in Bishops’ Letter

Homosexual behavior still considered “immoral”

Washington, DC October 1, 1997 In a pastoral letter to American Catholics, the National Conference of Catholic Bishops yesterday urged parents of homosexual children to accept their children’s sexual orientation. The statement, a self-described “out-stretched hand,” still condemns sexual behavior outside of heterosexual marriage.

In the message entitled “Always Our Children,” the Bishops stress that the Church’s teachings on human dignity and respect be extended to all regardless of their sexual orientation. It provided suggestions for parents coming to terms with their children’s sexual orientation and integrating it with their religious beliefs.

The statement, however, makes a clear separation between sexual orientation and sexual behavior. While condemning discrimination against individuals on the basis of their sexual orientation, the statement reasserts the Church’s belief that homosexual behavior is “objectively immoral.” It reiterates that sexual relations are exclusively reserved for a married man and woman for the purpose of creating a new human life.

The following statement is attributable to Kerry Lobel, executive director of the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force:

“I welcome the open acknowledgment by the Bishops that a person’s sexual orientation should not be the basis of discrimination or injustice. Gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgendered people face discrimination every day, despite eleven states having outlawed such activity. I hope this open discussion within the Catholic Church will ease the pain of young people coming to grips with their sexual orientation. I reject their notion, however, that our behavior is immoral. We call on the Church to end its mixed message and recognize and affirm the loving relationships we have which cannot be separated from sexual expression.

The National Gay and Lesbian Task Force has worked to eliminate prejudice, violence and injustice against gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgendered people at the local, state and national level since its inception in 1973. As part of a broader social justice movement for freedom, justice and equality, NGLTF is creating a world that respects and celebrates the diversity of human expression and identity where all people may fully participate in society.

WASHINGTON, DC: On September 17, 1997 Vice President Al Gore addressed a crowd of about 300 people at the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force’s eighth annual “Honoring Our Allies” reception last Monday night in Washington, DC. The annual event honors those who make an extraordinary contribution to gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgendered (GLBT) communities.

In his remarks, the Vice President reaffirmed his commitment to fight against discrimination faced by members of the GLBT community. He also told the crowd that in addition to having a seat at the table, “everybody’s got to realize that as full members of the American family, it’s your table too.”

The Vice President came to pay tribute to Coretta Scott King.

John Sweeney, President of the AFL-CIO; and the Mautner Project, a health service organization for lesbians with cancer. All three were recipients of the 1997 Honoring Our Allies award. Senator Edward Kennedy (D-MA) introduced Mrs. King and renewed his commitment to pushing for passage of the Employment Nondiscrimination Act (ENDA).

In her acceptance speech, Mrs. King said in 1997, “Still hear from people who claim to be followers of Martin Luther King, Jr., but who think I should be silent about the human rights concerns of gays and lesbians.” She said the civil rights movement should be inclusive and unified. “All of us who oppose discrimination and support equal rights should stand together to resist every attempt to restrict civil rights in this country,” she added.

Echoing similar sentiments, Vice President Gore remarked that gays and lesbians “certainly have my commitment to work as hard as I can” to stop anti-gay hate crimes, find a cure for AIDS and end workplace discrimination. The Vice President, who was well-received by the crowd, also vowed to ensure gay and lesbian issues continue to have a place on the agenda of this Administration.

Vice President Gore reiterated the Administration’s commitment to combat hate crimes against members of minority groups, including the GLBT community. He spoke about the upcoming White House conference planned for November which is intended to focus attention on these acts of violence and ways to prevent them. “Some of the greatest challenges we face are not challenges of law but challenges of the heart,” said the Vice President. “Please be assured, you certainly have my commitment to work as hard as I can until the day we do reach those goals.”

Linda Chavez-Thompson, executive vice president of the AFL-CIO accepted the award for Mr. Sweeney. Chavez-Thompson, the highest ranking woman of color in the labor movement said, “your destiny and our destiny are linked.” Recalling an old Woody Guthrie song, she said “this land wasn’t made for the bigots who claim that their families and their marriages are threatened by your families and your marriages.

This land was made for you and me to live with dignity and security and equality and hope.”

Don’t forget the FREE test screening of BUDDY YAM on Thursday afternoon (10/2) at 3:00. See last week’s missive for a description of the film or e-mail me if you want more information. I forgot to mention that the film is set in the 19th century which, at least to me, makes the sorcery aspect and the quest into unknown territory all the more intriguing.

At last we’re going to get to see THE FULL MONTY and judge for ourselves if it’s as funny as we’ve heard and deserves all the hype it’s been getting. Critics and audience have been lavish in their praise for this film and it’s been setting box office records in many theaters. Hopefully, that will be the case in Waterville. A few weeks ago it was the number five film in the country; not bad for an art-house film, especially because there were only 500 prints in circulation at the time. Many of the top grossing films had 1,500 or more prints on screen.

Sandra Haggard was the winner of last week’s trivia contest. Sandra and 22 others correctly identified Gena Rowlands as the star of her son Nick Cassavetes’ film, UNHOOK THE STARS. This week’s contest couldn’t be simpler: what does “the full monty” mean? I’ll accept the “correct” definition as well as any fake definitions you care to invent that I find amusing. All answers that fit the aforementioned criteria received before 9:30 on Friday morning (10/3) will be entered into a drawing for 2 tickets to THE FULL MONTY.

As always, you can get descriptions, dates and times of all the films we’re showing, on our web site located at http://www.mint.net/movies.
ML/GPA Halloween Costume Party Benefit

"Will be a Ball"

The Maine Lesbian/Gay Political Alliance's first annual costume party extravaganza, The Great Pumpkin Ball, will be held on Halloween, October 31 from 7:30 p.m. to 12 a.m at the Ballroom by the Bay, Holiday Inn in Portland. Partygoers will dance to the music of Maine's most popular DJ's, enjoy special performances by top area talent, and receive glittering prizes in a costume competition judged by Maine celebrities. Best of all, the event will help ML/GPA protect the rights of Maine's lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgendered communities. Event sponsors include Blackstone's, Barbara's Kitchen and Cafe, and InNewsweekly. The Great Pumpkin Ball is produced in association with Above & Beyond Productions.

Ticket sales are brisk. "This is truly a hot dance event," says ML/GPA Board Member David Steven Rappoport. "Yet, we've kept the ticket prices low so everyone can attend." ML/GPA's President, Betsy Smith, adds "we're very pleased that the community is so excited about this fund-raiser. People know how vital it is to support ML/GPA's struggle against the religious right. And they also know that the Great Pumpkin Ball is GOING TO BE A BLAST."

Costume prizes will be awarded in many categories including Tackiest, Sexiest, Most Original, and Most Politically Incorrect. A dazzling array of giveaway goodies includes theater and concert tickets, gift certificates from Portland's top restaurants including Barbara's Cafe, Hugo's, Katahdin, Natasha's, Street & Company, Tabitha Jean's, and The Spirited Gourmet, a night for two at the Maple Hill Farm Bed and Breakfast, and more. The Grand Prize Winner will receive a downtown Portland Holiday Shopping Spree.

Celebrity judges will light up the night including popular entertainer Lynn Deoves, WMTM-TV's Bob Dyk, WBLM-FM's Mark Persky, InNewsweekly's publisher Chris Robinson, Portland Deputy Chief of Police Mark Dion, Maine Won't Discriminate's Pat Peard, Drop Me A Line's Jim Neal, and MS Karla, the reigning Miss Gay Maine.

Music for the Great Pumpkin Ball will be provided by Lisa Vaccaro, R&R DJ's Rich and Ruthann, and Millennium's Bruce wild, and special performances will include the Shoestring Theater and the country line-dance drill team, Two Left Feet.

Tickets are $10 in advance and $13 at the door and are available at Drop Me A Line (Portland) and Macbeans (Brunswick). To charge tickets on any major credit card, call (207) 773-6974.

Book Review: Cemetery Murders

by C.M. Brennan

So much in our culture has been predicated upon a notion of "if it works, it must be good...don't fix it". Why tinker with success? Look what happened to Coca-Cola! However, this does not mean that any one prefabricated product or idea is any better for your body and soul than Wonder Bread.

Such is the problem with Jean Marcy's debut novel, Cemetery Murders. Cemetery Murders is yet another in a long line of cookie-cutter dyketective novels, in which the lonely but stoic PI (who is, of course, a brunette), battles her lust for the frigid-but-alluring cop/rival PI/S/M diva/supermarket checkout girl (who is, invariably, a blonde) with more gusto than she chases the story's evil-doer. (How one can find frigidity can alluring is beyond me, but I think there's a 12-step program for those who suffer.) That the lone lesbian PI eventually succeeds in nailing the "bad guy" despite her difficulty in remaining vertical is quite remarkable.

There is little point in sketching a plot line: they are infinitely interchangeable, like Legos, regardless of author, publisher, or proposed scenario.

Granted, this type of reading material is not intended to encourage conscious thought in the reader. Rather, it is a fairly banal means of suspending all brain activity and whiling away a rainy Saturday afternoon.

Readers who yearn for books with substance would do well to pass by the marshmallow fluff of the dyketective novel series (any and all of them). And if you cannot find the substance you are looking for, write your own damn book. Why more women do not is a true lesbian mystery.

Romantic Piano Sensation Returns to Portland

Jim Brickman, the Composer, pianist and performer whose dreamily romantic piano artistry and high-spirited, witty interaction with his audiences have made him one of America's most popular new concert performers.

Brickman has been called a songwriter of the nineties, who combines romantic lyricism with top forty hits. He revealed a whole new musical canvas earlier this year with the release of Picture this, which include the hit single "Valentine." A simple romantic ballad with vocals by country artist Martina McBride, the song gave Brickman his first number one hit at Adult Contemporary Radio.

His other top ten singles have included the popular songs "Angel Eyes" and "If You Believe" from his Windham Hill recording By Heart, and "Hero's Dream," a song he wrote for NBC-TV coverage of the Summer Olympics in Atlanta. He became the first solo piano artist ever to appear on the pop charts with "Rocket to the Moon" from his first album, No Words.

Brickman selections with vocals are sung in concert by his long-time vocalist, Anne Cochran, who began singing with him when they were both high school students in Cleveland.

From his beginnings as a top-ranked commercial jingle writer Brickman has developed into a nationally-recognized concert performer, recording artist and host of a nationally syndicated radio show.

Jim Brickman will be performing at the Merrill Auditorium November 13, 1997 8:00 PM. Brickman selections with vocals are sung by his long-time high school friend Anne Cochran.

Bi Space: “Bi 101”

by Bobbi Keppel and Pete Chvany

Last month Bobbi and I introduced ourselves. This month, while Bobbi’s on vacation, I’ll discuss bisexuality as an “orientation.” Think of this column as a course in Bisexuality 101. Don’t worry: no quizzes!

It’s important when talking about sexuality to distinguish “orientations” from people’s behavior, attractions, fantasies, and identities. Let’s take a concrete example. A straight friend recently told me that he slept with both males and females in bis youth.

He said that he enjoyed his same-sex experiences, but that women had consistently attracted him more powerfully than men. Since he is monogamous and married, he chooses to identify as straight. An observer might note his “bisexual” history and his potential for future bisexual or even exclusively gay behavior.

But since that potential appears small, his self-identification seems consistent. Perhaps in fantasy my friend’s feelings for men differ from his outward expressions. But maybe he fantasizes about women while staying monogamous with his wife. Many people prefer to keep their fantasies fantastic.

I know a gay man who has been strongly attracted to a few women and a straight woman who loves Dana Scully from “The X-Files.” These folks behave consistently with their identities, though their attractions and fantasies sometimes go in other directions.

With these distinctions in mind, we can define bisexuality several ways. In one sense, bisexuality is just the ability to be attracted, sexually and romantically, to people of more than one gender. This definition focuses on emotional qualities, on attractions and fantasies. (It often implies that the attraction is to the two better-known genders of male and female, but there can be overlaps between the bi and transgender communities as well.)

We can also think of bisexuality as an identity which considers the ability to be attracted to members of more than one gender important. Some bi folk have attractions to both genders but have not yet found circumstances that feel right for expressing them for one gender.

We live in a culture which regards direct experience as the best proof of a person’s “real feelings.” But the feelings of gay and lesbian youth who know they are only attracted to their own gender before they have had sex make it reasonable for some people to identify as bi, even if they are celibate or have only had sexual relationships with one gender so far.

Clearly one can also identify as bisexual given one’s sexual and emotional history of involvement with people of more than one gender. A woman in a long-term monogamous lesbian relationship might still identify as bisexual if she considered previous relationships with both men and women important to her self-conception.

And some bisexuals identify as both gay/lesbian and bisexual depending on the context. When coming out, I knew that many people who don’t understand bisexuality would see me as a gay man. I decided to get comfortable with this “mistake,” and to proudly call myself a gay man at times, because disavowing my homosexuality would be homophobic.

The fact that my behavior is not exclusively homosexual is a separate issue from my commitment to ending the oppression of gay men and lesbians. As another friend put it, “someone can identify as bisexual and have attractions to, fantasies about, romantic relationships, and sex with members of more than one gender.

However, one can identify as gay, lesbian, or straight as have all these, also. And one can identify as bisexual and NOT have one or more of these.”

Next month, we’ll discuss some common myths and stereotypes about bi’s and bisexuality. Till then, class dismissed!

Trans Forum: As I was saying........

by Daralyn S Maxwell

It becomes obvious, even and especially to someone for whom there are no immediate benefits, that in order to have a solid and cohesive community, there needs to be participation of some sort from all quarters.

Of late I have noticed that, despite the best of intentions, the actual activity generated by various members of the (gay) community always seems to rest on a few intrepid souls while the rest of the populace does a fair bit of armchair quarterbacking, second-guessing, and out and out criticism of those who are actually working for the common good. The question becomes: The common good of whom? I will remove myself as a beneficiary of this because the Christians aren’t interested in transgendered women at the moment. On top of that, even if the Equal Rights bill withstands the latest “wrath of God,” nowhere does it specify that I or any other transgendered person will enjoy the same protection under the law that the rest of the gay community will. But where are the people who will be enjoying this?

There is a lot of The Little Red Hen in this scenario, mostly because no one wants to pick the wheat (get signatures), chase the wheat (help raise money OR contribute), mill the flour (show up for anything as a sign of support), or bake the bread (all of the above!). The fact is that for every reason why someone should be involved, they find a myriad reasons why they shouldn’t. In the end, though, if the measure is defeated by a rollback referendum, where do we place the blame?

Let’s start with MLGPA; undermanned and underfunded. Moving on to MWD, half of the community has MWD out of the picture as out of the loop. So who’s in the loop? And when is this loop going to manifest itself into something tangible that coordinates and energizes people to make a stand that they have had enough of being discriminated against? And why would I, as a transgendered person, get all riled up this way? Very simple: I’m next.

When the time comes that the community has what they want then I and others like me are going to ask for OUR place in the sun. If I stand around deciding that this issue or that issue doesn’t suit me at the moment because it won’t afford me immediate relief, then I am truly not looking ahead at the long-term, and my future will be as shaky as the amount of effort I did not put into it. And where, you might ask, are MY solutions? I didn’t say I had any.

However, I do think that in the long run it is in the best interest of every member of the g/l/b/t community to extend themselves just that little bit extra. You don’t have to be rich to send MLGPA, MWD or some other useful organization your anonymous $10. You don’t have to be OUT to patronize a business that is gay-owned, gay-friendly and in need of your patronage. You certainly don’t have to put your picture in the paper that you made some phone calls or stuffed envelopes.

What you do have to do is think about the people fighting for you. While you are doing that, write your own letter to a company that you know has discriminatory practices; boycott a business that you know doesn’t support the community; let others know what you are up to, and be receptive to their ideas and input.

While I am not necessarily an immediate beneficiary of forward politics, I am assured that whenever equal rights encompassing ALL members of the HUMAN community become a reality, I will know that I wasn’t snoozing on the sidelines because it was less painful than extending myself that little bit. Besides, it is OUR community, and those damn Christians can’t have it!

Your choice: Be heard, and get to the polls, or get cozy with your closest. Dal Maxwell can be found ranting and raving in Portland, Maine. Reach her through CPR or by e-mail at dalmax@ime.net.
Cranky Observations

by C.M. Brennan

All this blather from Michael Heath and the Christian Civic League has me pondering the ramifications of this new referendum drive. Suppose it were to succeed? Beyond all effort, all desire to defeat the paranoid legions, what if they pull it off? Oh, it's a very scary thought. . . .the kind that ruins entire evenings and healthy appetites. If there are no assurances for equal access to housing, jobs, credit and services for gays and lesbians, does that mean, by extension, there is also no assurance for similarly equal access for heterosexuals?

Here's a smile and a hinting thought: What if all lesi/gay/bi/trans proprietors and business folk ran their operations with an eye toward curbing the heterosexual menace? They with their amazing capacity for reproduction, hypocricaligious views, and government tax breaks! It's enough to make any struggling homo family sick — why can't those straight people pony up a buck and pay their way like we do? Sure would improve the economy! And so, the mood sweeps through the state as, one by one, doors that were previously open begin a slow shift closed. What would the impact be? . . .

I imagine a phone ringing on the front desk of a swanky B&B in Ogunquit The man and fabo designer, takes a call from a gent in Augusta:

"Thank you for calling Escape to Ogunquit. How may I help you?"

"Ah, yes," says the caller. "I'd like to make a reservation for Columbus Day weekend."

"Thank you, sir. For how many?"

"Ah, two. Only two. It's our first anniversary."

"How sweet! Are you married to a man or a woman?"

"Excuse me?"

"Are you married to a man or a woman? We have strict regulations about letting rooms to heterosexual couples. It upsets the balance of the Inn's energy, you see."

"But, we spent our wedding night there!"

"Oh, tut, tut! Times change! I'm sorry, but if you are bringing your wife, I'm afraid I cannot give you a room. You are welcome to stay by yourself, if you're not too obvious about it. Don't want you flashing your wedding ring all over the place — makes the guests sooo uncomfortable."

"But... but... my money is the same as everyone else's! I've stayed there before and it was never a problem!"

"Oh, I'm sure you have. But now that Maine has denied gays and lesbians the right to housing, jobs, credit and services, it's more important than ever that gay-owned businesses and services support the community. I just cannot give up a room to a straight couple when there's probably a lesbian family who needs it. I'm sure you and your... wife... can understand that."

"You can't do that!! That's discrimination!!!"

"You're darn tootin', honey. And there isn't a single thing you can do about it, either. No more than I can."

The submission of this article could be just the tip of the iceberg. An entire segment of the population could throw up its weary hands in resignation and capitulate to the temptation of resentment and revenge.

"Welcome to Weeds and Seeds: do you prefer the vegetarian section or environmental degradation?"

"Vegetarian, please."

"All right then. Sir, I trust that the woman accompanying you is your sister?"

"No, man s' my girlfriend."

"I'm sorry. I'll have to ask you to leave. We don't serve your kind here."

"But... . ."

"This is a lesbian cooperative dining establishment. No smoking, no polyester, no leather, no alcohol, no perfume, no chemicals, no preservatives, no heterosexual couples. We want our customers to feel comfortable, not threatened that you are going to try and take the place over or, goddess forbid, touch each other. Thank you and have a nice day."

Sound extreme? Sure it does. Sound unlikely? Not when you consider that similar scenarios have been acted out for years against our community, scenarios which could flourish should the Radical Right have its way. There certainly are those who would act with impunity upon their fears should LD 1116 be rescinded. Having experienced firsthand the grace with which we have handled our various setbacks, I highly doubt our community as an entity will be counted among those numbers... but it sure is tempting to think about sometimes, ain't it?

Portland Obscenities

by Micheal Rosette

Earlier this year the Fine Arts Cinema was denied it's license to operate as possibly the last chapter in an ongoing battle over sexual activity there. The City of Portland has followed up that move with an effectively done shutting decision by an obscenity jury to fine the "slime pit" an adult video and print store, there. The shop was forced to close the doors and clean up it's act, eventually closing its doors. The subject of the Fine Arts, Rick McPhearson's commentaries and the Treasure Chest have also been largely debated publicly. The pages of recent issues of the Casco Bay Weekly are ripe with letters complaining about both the enforcement efforts and McPhearson. As well, me-gay-net has been bombarded with emails debating morality, enforcement, and again, the now San Francisco bound McPhearson...
Christianity Choice

by Emanuel Vasey

What I don’t get is why more people (myself included) don’t counter the “lifestyle choice” argument by pointing out that religious belief and practice is even more clearly a “lifestyle choice.” Nobody is inherently Christian, or Muslim, or Hindu, or Jewish (in the sense of faith, not ethnic origin). They are raised in and indoctrinated into these faith traditions. This renders their entire argument moot, because they then have no rational defense for giving their lifestyle choice special rights (we know they already have them, but it would make them own up to it) when that’s what they claim to be against.

They can’t argue morality, either, because many things a Christian would consider benign (e.g., eating pork or cheeseburgers) would be morally repugnant to a Muslim or orthodox Jew, and not all faith traditions are homophobic (my own religious belief is that queerness is next to godliness : ). They can claim divine authority all they want, but unless they can prove which divinity, or interpretation of any particular divinity, is the true authority (Will the real God please stand up.) That entire argument falls into meaninglessness, leaving them with nothing but “because I said so.”

I think getting to that point would make it a lot easier for us to counter their other lies, because it’s what helps make their filth so palatable to the fence-sitters in the first place. Furthermore, I think it would make people face up to the indoctrinated sexismphobia that makes many otherwise “liberal” people uncomfortable with us in the first place. Not that it would fix things magically, but it’s a strategy I haven’t heard discussed and I’ve felt for some time that it deserves consideration. Any thoughts?

Letter to the Editor: Equal Not Special

Ted Blanche had something with his suggestion of Equal Not Special. In my local edition of the Lewiston Sun yesterday there was a “Heard on the Street” which asked people in Jay and Livermore Falls “Do you think there should be a special law to forbid discrimination against gays and lesbians?” You can imagine the responses to this leading question.

They handed these folks the word “special.” They showed six responses. One woman just did the “against god’s law” thing. One woman actually responded that people should all be treated the same, no matter what they do in bed (Hooray- but only one out of six!) Another said that we have to do our best to kill discrimination in housing, jobs, etc. Yes, I know we did all this at the hearing, but that “special rights” lie is very powerful! I believe we also need to call them on that lie. When our enemies say “special rights” why don’t we ask them why they are lying? Especially since this is also becoming a moral issue. Hello!! Homosexuality is not even mentioned in the 10 commandments, but lying sure is.

So people out there are hearing this powerful lie about “special rights.” It is only natural that they resent that, after all, many or us resent that legal marriage confers many special rights we do not have access to. I think we have to do our best to kill the “special rights” argument.

They think we are covered under the constitution already, and must be looking for some “extras.”

The worst part of this little newspaper item was the response from the man who said, “I don’t believe that we should discriminate, but creating a special law for gays and lesbians increased the discrimination against straight people and religious groups.” I know this guy. He could not think of this himself. I know he is beating what he has been told at his church. He goes to a RRR church. These are the places I bet many of those signatures came from. They listen to a long, long rant from the pulpit- partially scripted by Pat Robertson probably- they get all worked up hearing these lies and are asked to sign the petition that will save the Grand State of Maine from going straight to Hell! (Ever notice no one ever goes GAY to Hell?) They are told that if anyone ever disagrees with them, that means they are being discriminated against!

Ok, enough of a rant. I really get worked up about this LYING! Can you tell? “SPECIAL RIGHTS” IS A LIE! NO ONE IS ASKING FOR SPECIAL RIGHTS- JUST EQUAL RIGHTS!!!!

By The Number Guy

This is the first installment of what I hope will be a regular column in Community Pride Reporter. After all - a newspaper with an editor named Angel should have at least one regular New Agey feature. Don't you agree?

My topic will be numerology, sometimes called number mysticism. Numerology is obscure, even by the already esoteric standards of the occult. Generally, astrology, which is not only vastly more popular, but also considered by many to be more profound, overshadows numerology.

I think astrology and numerology spring from different aspects of the human experience, and as a result, each has particular strengths. In this column I want to briefly discuss one element of basic numerology - the karmic numbers. But before I do, let me explain some of the most basic elements of numerology.

Numerologists believe that each of the numbers 0 through 9 has a specific meaning and that larger numbers and letters can be reduced to each of these numbers. The number 10, for instance, can be reduced to 1 (1+0=1). The number 22 can be reduced to 4 (2+2=4).

Letters can be reduced simply by noting their position in the alphabet. For example, A is 1, B is 2, C is 3 and so forth. X, the 24th letter of alphabet, reduces to 6 (24+6), K, the 11th letter, reduces to 2 (1+1=2), etc. (See the chart below).

Numerology Conversion Chart

| A | B | C | D | E | F | G | H | I | J | K | L | M | N | O | P | Q | R | S | T | U | V | W | X | Y | Z |
| 1 | 2 | 3 | 4 | 5 | 6 | 7 | 8 | 9 | 10 | 11 | 12 | 13 | 14 | 15 | 16 | 17 | 18 | 19 | 20 | 21 | 22 | 23 | 24 |

In numerology, we take combinations of letters and numbers (usually people's full names and their dates of birth) and add them up in various ways. For example, let's take a person with the name FRANK. FRANK would equal 7 (July is the 7th month) plus 4 (the day of the month) plus 3 (1+7+7+6+2=1+3) for a total of 5.

This is the karmic lesson of "zero." The meanings of each karmic lesson follow.

Zero Karmic Lesson: No missing numbers. This generally suggests that the person is here to work on everything in this life, instead of on one or more particular areas.

One Karmic Lesson: Missing One (A, J, and S). One is the self, and a lack of one suggests difficulty in taking the initiative, being a leader, and standing up for oneself. A great reluctance to take risks may also be present. People missing the number one will find themselves in situations requiring them to assert themselves.

Two Karmic Lesson: Missing Two (B, K, and T). The number two represents partnerships. Those missing two in their name will have difficulty getting along with others, particularly one-on-one. Often, people missing two are hypersensitive, overreacting to real or imagined slights. Sometimes they are extremely tactless. In either case, they would benefit from developing better interpersonal skills.

Three Karmic Lesson: Missing Three (C, L, and U). This is the challenge of self-expression and less often, of learning to enjoy life. Those missing three in their name will benefit from working on their speaking and writing skills, and from any activities which encourage creative expression. Attention to the appearance is also important. Sometimes those missing three will also find it difficult to take pleasure in life. Such people will benefit from socializing, entertaining, travel, and similar activities, as well as from cultivating a positive attitude.

Four Karmic Lesson: Missing Four (D, M, and V). Four is the number of work. Those lacking it will have great difficulty in taking projects of all sorts from beginning to end in a methodical way. They may also find themselves lacking in common sense or simply have poor decision-making abilities. People missing four will benefit from creating orderly lives that stress hard work and logical thinking.

Five Karmic Lesson: Missing Five (E, N, and W). A lack of five suggests a lack of desire to be broadened by experience. There will likely be a disinterest in travel, freedom, change, and excitement of all sorts. The person may be rigid and dislike interaction with others. This is probably the rarest karmic lesson; I do not believe I have ever met anyone without E, N, or W in their name.

Six Karmic Lesson: Missing Six (F, O, and X). Six will bring lessons relating to responsibility, particularly as it applies to committed relationships and the family. Often, such people are capricious in relationships. They may abandon committed relationships for questionable reasons and then live to regret the decision. Similarly, they may get into relationships without appropriate forethought and be unhappy. People with six karma would be wise to nurture their sense of duty towards those close to them, and to avoid impulsively getting into or out of relationships.

Seven Karmic Lesson: Missing Seven (G, P, and Y). Seven is the lesson of the spirit; that the world of the senses is only a part of what is. I find this karmic lesson to be the most fascinating, because it frequently manifests in interesting ways. An example: a friend with seven karma grew up in a house with poisonous snakes in the basement. These poisonous snakes were not native to the area, occurred nowhere else nearby, and could not be removed by any means. The lessons of seven are not always so colorful, but generally odd events come into the life, often of an occult, religious, spiritual, or less often, scientific nature.

Eight Karmic Lesson: Missing Eight (H, Q, and Z). Eight is the opposite lesson to seven; it is the lesson that the material world is important. People with this karmic lesson would be advised to learn to value money and material things appropriately; not to undervalue or overvalue them. Typically, a person with eight karma will receive a substantial sum of money at some time in his or her life, misunderstand it, and live to regret it. Often, people with eight karma have little discipline or good sense in financial matters, and this makes their lives much more difficult than they would otherwise be. Less often, eight brings lessons about the proper use of power.

Nine Karmic Lesson: Missing Nine (I, and K). Nine is the lesson of spiritual love, and will bring experiences probably unwelcome which develop compassion. The person missing nine is likely to be lacking in humanitarian feelings, which may manifest in any number of ways: intolerance, selfishness, and an inability to give freely of one's emotions, and so forth. Like five, nine is a rare karmic lesson. I believe the karmic lessons are very important. In many lives, they are strong obstacles, and the proper understanding of them can be key to making material and spiritual progress.

Healing Technology Explained in Portland

Gentle Wind Project, completely restores a person's energetic structure when held only one time for three minutes. This unique healing will be available, at no charge, to everyone attending a Portland seminar hosted by the Kittery-based, non-profit would healing organization on October 19th.

The Gentle wind researchers, former social workers, educators, and therapists, believe that life's hurts and the wounds are stored in the energetic structure, or aura, resulting in impaired human functioning. The Project's healing technology improves the quality of people's lives and greatly relieve much of the human suffering that is inherent in life.

One aspect to this healing restores the sense of "belongingness" in gay people who may have been hurt through cultural and social prejudices. While this healing technology has nothing to do with trying to alter a person's sexual orientation, it does clarify all aspects of life-relationships being just one part.

A gay friend who I introduced to the work of Gentle Wind reported to me that, after years of confusion and isolation, she "...feels part of life now." She explains, "I used to feel like an observer, separate from the life that was going on around me. Although I was productive and had happy times in my life, I could never call myself a happy person. I now feel like I belong, and can honestly say that I'm happy. I am so relieved and truly amazed by the difference."

Eye on Equality: Telling Truths

Like many people, I have found myself moved by the death of Diana, Princess of Wales. While it is true that I am a soft touch for determined blonde femmes who have profoundly large are so dishonored."

She understands there is great ing personal to political action each day looking for love herself. been selected to receive the prestigious with strong social convictions, I also accepting the homeless and people w ith AIDS . accepting myself moved byothy Hadjys and Adrienne Rich. Flanders, "You know, I really wouldn't changed the world in which we live, Dorothy's vigilance to tell the truth in the lives of millions around the world.

It is this transformation connecting personal to political action each day of our lives, that makes social change. Eye on Equality is a monthly column that discusses or gives commentary on national and state-level political events or provides a behind-the-scenes look at social movements and trends. The column is written by Kerry Lobel, Executive Director of the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force.

After 14 years of research, 92 percent of the people who used the healing technology found that their depression, anxieties, and stress-related conditions were alleviated. The majority say they now have inner resources to solve problems they once considered impossible, and that their personal relationships have improved or that they have moved on to healthier situations.

The October 19th seminar is at the WholeHeart Yoga Center, 150 St. John, from 2-4 PM. Requested donation is $10. To pre-register, call 207-374-2437, 207-774-9824, email: judyg@acadianet, or visit the web site at: www.gentlewindproject.org.

Lisa and Susanne Clements are pleased to announce the opening of the first, all-inclusive, personal introduction service. Many people whom they know have little opportunity to meet potential companions because of their busy schedules or because they require the confidentiality that other venues do not provide.

Although public awareness is slowly changing toward people who live in alternative lifestyles, it is still difficult to meet potential companions with whom you may share interests and values. Thus, Rainbow Circle of Friends was born. Rainbow Circle of Friends is the only personal introduction service to serve diverse populations regardless of sexual orientation.

Lisa used to work for a company which called itself the most well known dating service in the world, it probably is. I've had for 16 years who's known that is to several thousand people that we've met personally and that are interested in casual dating or serious relationships, one referral or three, we match by goals computability, we wouldn't mix casual with serious. We network people from state to state.

After the initial telephone interview if the caller wants to purchase the service and everyone is comfortable they meet personally with the applicant. This service is also for people with disabilities and is truly an all inclusive service. The owners suppose that they may be being realistic but they feel that people, no matter what race, religion, nationality, sex, sexual orientation or gender all deserve a chance for happiness.

One Lesbian caller asked how someone straight could find her a date? Good point! This is another reason the owners feel it is important to have people from the populations they're trying to serve working with them. Rainbow Circle of Friends serves Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts and helps people who want to relocate. The service is strictly personal and confidential. Rainbow Consultants have training and education in health, civil rights, special services, aids awareness and human relations. Research has found that human companionship and being in love is good for your health. Start improving your health today by contacting Rainbow Circle of Friends toll-free at 888-899-RCOF.
