ME Gay Rights Opponents Collect Enough Signatures

by Glenn Adams

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP) — Saying it was a miracle they reached their goal, gay rights foes announced Thursday they had gathered more than enough signatures to force a referendum on a new law barring discrimination against homosexuals.

“It’s a miracle of God,” Michael Heath, executive director of the Christian Civic League of Maine, said as he stood behind five cardboard boxes full of petitions.

A chorus of “Amen” arose from the two dozen petition volunteers standing behind Heath at a State House news conference. Once the petitions were checked over by state election officials, the gay rights law will be on hold pending the outcome of the referendum.

Gays, who were overjoyed when the law was enacted earlier this year, were angered and disappointed by Thursday’s developments, said an activist.

Heath said volunteers all over the state gathered 58,750 voters’ signatures. A total of 51,131 were needed to force a “people’s veto” referendum and what was promoted as a civil rights law in abeyance.

The law, which was approved by the Legislature earlier this year after a two-decade effort, bars discrimination on the basis of sexual preference in housing, public accommodations, credit and employment.

Christian Coalition of Maine leader Paul Volle said opponents believe the law “confers special rights to homosexuals” and compromises the rights of “people of faith.”

“The legislation had threatened the civil liberties of business owners, parents and even charitable organizations that decline to celebrate homosexuality,” said Heath.

A leader of the Maine Lesbian-Gay Political Alliance said she was surprised the opponents were able to round up the signatures they needed, but remained confident that voters will uphold the law when they vote on it at a special election on a yet-undated date after November but before next April.

“The reality is we’ve proven our case over a number of years,” said Karen Geraghty, a former president of the alliance.

“I’m angry because we have to go through another referendum, and I’m disappointed because groups of fundamental Christians are unwilling to accept that the law has been (enacted),” she said.

State election officials have 30 days to certify there are enough valid signatures to force the referendum. If they find fewer than 51,131 signatures are valid, the gay rights law will take effect the following day, said Secretary of State Dan Gwadosky. Otherwise, the law will be on hold pending the outcome of the referendum.

In 1995, Maine voters narrowly defeated a referendum plan to ban anti-discrimination protection for homosexuals. The proposal sought to limit local and state civil rights protections to age, sex, religion and seven other categories already in the Maine Human Rights Act.

Give Children Hope

by Chelsea Mooser

World AIDS day this year will be focusing on children I used to think that meant to children living with the disease. Eight months ago I learned it also means something totally different. I left for Zimbabwe in January of 1997.

I prepared myself to work on an AIDS study in a country with one of the highest rates of infection in the world. In Zimbabwe I worked with Dr. Geoff Foster, a local pediatrician, and a team of Africa University students to learn more about child-headed households.

Our job was to access the living conditions and coping mechanisms of children who’s parents had died of AIDS. We would travel to rural areas to interview children sometimes as young as twelve who had stepped out of the role of “child” and into the role of “parent.”

The children I met where strong, they had been through more than I can imagine. Some of the children were hopeful for the future, some couldn’t see beyond the day.

At first I was surprised at how well these children seemed to be coping. They just kept living I guess they had no choice. There was no longer anywhere for them to turn to.

The first weekend we drove out to St. Agustines, a mission community, to practice the interview process. The trip out was bumpy there were nine of us crammed into the back of a covered pick up truck.

The drive was about fifteen minutes from the paved road. We got out at the village center which was no more than the school and the health clinic. It was the kind of Zimbabwe I had pictured and I felt like your typical American going off to get the “African Experience.”

A local kid who lived in St. Agustines led me and my research partners, Darlington and Kundai to the household we were to interview. The walk was about fifteen kilometers and took us two and a half hours. We crossed four rivers scurried up mountains and through jungle like vegetation. It was more walking than I had done in months.

I tried to imagine what it must be like to have to make that walk every morning for school but I was too tired to think about it. The first household we went to consisted of three huts. I felt like I was in a documentary and the woman speaking to us in Shona should have subtitles below her head.

She was an old woman caring for her seven grandchildren. It was a small room we were sitting in the told us the other rooms were falling down and this is where they lived. There was a small fire in the center which filled the room with smoke and heat. There was a broken bed across the room and I wondered who slept there.

Above the bed was a row of shelves housing a few cups with some ripped up newspaper underneath them. There was nothing no toys, no books no nothing. Only the seven children and their grandmother preparing a pot of pumpkin leaves for dinner.

The harvest was late to come, she explained, and they wouldn’t have maize for a while yet. This was their life at that moment I felt so lucky I realized how much I had. There was a boy who was probably my age who had bad asthma which he couldn’t fight, he lived in this smoky room and wasn’t getting better. He was probably going to die. I was sitting there listening to him talk but I knew that in two years he’ll probably be dead.

These seven children had watched their father die of AIDS and their mother disappear. Life either. For us in the States, and the middle-class Zimbabweans, life is about living well but for these seven children and their grandmother, life was just about living.

We finished up the interview and walked back towards the village, towards our truck, towards our perfect lives. We continued to do interviews for a few months, gathering data from hundreds of children around eastern Zimbabwe.

The children had different ways of coping with life. Some had jobs, some depended on fields of maize planted by their parents. Life was tougher for children in the less fertile areas. They would often report going to bed hungry two or more nights a week.

Most of the children didn't have shoes and they all thanked us profusely for the small bag of beans we would give them as we left. During these months AIDS became real to me. Not as a medical problem or a political issue, but as just another hard thing piled onto the life of children throughout Zimbabwe and the rest of the world.

Before I went to Zimbabwe I didn't know much about AIDS. I didn't really understand. When the project was all over we had a dinner party so Geoff could present the findings. I saw all my work become just like those facts I had once read about.

All the bugs and guavas and footpaths had become facts. But for me these things will never be facts or statistics again. The twelve year old girl with four brothers will never be a statistic. The sick boy who walks five miles to school will never be a statistic. The girl whose uncle "visited" in exchange for the small bag of beans we would give them as we left.

Unfortunately, extended families have recently been economically unable to care for the large number of children being left parent-less. When the project was all over, I returned this June with a deeper understanding of the global impact of AIDS. Twenty percent of the people in Zimbabwe are living with AIDS. In Zimbabwe, as is true with most of the world, AIDS is a disease of poverty.

Medical care is out of reach to many Zimbabweans. A general lack of health care leaves people susceptible to infectious diseases. Untreated STDs lead to easier transmission of the AIDS. Women who are economically disadvantaged turn to prostitution.

With such a high rate of infection other problems are starting to appear in Zimbabwe. The newest is a huge orphan population. In traditional Zimbabwean society, when a child's parent died the extended family would take care of the orphaned children.

In Zimbabwe AIDS was personal. They can't afford to be medical or political. For Zimbabweans, an American cure doesn't really matter, it won't solve their problems they can't even afford aspirin. In Zimbabwe the focus is on helping people deal with the life they are forced to live.

For Zimbabweans, the focus is on helping, they can't even afford aspirin. In the United States there are still many who are economically disadvantaged turn to prostitution.

Court Rules: Ban on Gay Group From Public Facility

TOKYO (AP) In a victory for gay rights in Japan, Tokyo's highest court Tuesday upheld a lower court ruling that said city officials were wrong to bar a gay group from using a public facility.

The education division of the Tokyo-city government refused in 1990 to let the Association for the Lesbian and Gay Movement, known as OCCUR, stay in a city-run youth lodge. It said that because they were gay, using the facilities would violate the spirit of a rule prohibiting members of the opposite sex from sharing rooms. It said the prospect of a homosexual group having sex in the lodge would bother other guests.

Tokyo High Court Judge Hideichi Yazaki, ruling Tuesday on an appeal by the Tokyo government, said that what they did was discriminatory and illegal, and that they cannot continue to be indifferent toward or ignorant about homosexuals and other minority groups.

The ruling basically upheld one by the Tokyo District Court in 1994, though the high court more clearly prohibited Tokyo from discriminating against gays. "It was a huge victory for us," said Masaki Inaba a spokesperson for OCCUR. "It's great that we won but more needs to be done to end discrimination against homosexuals."

The high court ordered the city to pay OCCUR 160,000 yen (dls 1,333), less than the 260,000 yen (dls 2,167) awarded by the lower court. Inaba said the reduction was regrettable but that money was a secondary issue.

OCCUR had originally asked for dls 6.5 million yen (dls 54,000) to compensate for defamatory remarks allegedly made by city officials and youth center workers.

Most Japanese gays hide their sexual preference, fearing the prejudices of employers and others in a society where pressure to conform is intense. OCCUR, formed in 1986, has about 350 members; 60 percent are gay men and 40 percent are lesbians.

Church Official Advocates "Cure" for Homosexuality

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) A Mormon Church leader advocated a controversial form of therapy for homosexuals by suggesting they immerse themselves in the doctrines of the church to heal them of the sin of same-sex attraction.

Jay E. Jensen, a member of the First Quorum of Seventy in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, said gays must allow the faith's theology to "inoculate" them against homosexuality.

"When the Lord speaks to us, he speaks to our spirits if we had no body at all," Jensen said Saturday. "When the adversary speaks to us, he speaks to the flesh. All of the appetites, all of the passions are to enslave us."

About 300 gay men and women gathered with their families to listen to Jensen and participate in workshops with titles such as "Resisting the Struggle and the Temptations," and "Meeting Female Emotional Needs."

The conference was sponsored by Evergreen International, a group of therapists committed to the principles of "reparative" or "conversion" therapy to try to change gays into heterosexuals.

Evergreen is not a Mormon Church organization, but the group sustains the doctrines and standards of the church "without reservation or exception."

For years, the reparative approach described by Jensen has been discredited by most mainstream therapists.

The American Psychological Association the leading society of psychologists passed a resolution in August aimed at limiting the controversial practice of reparative therapy. It said there was no scientific proof that such therapy works and some potential for harm.

"This is a welcome addition from the scientific community to the condemnation of these anti-gay efforts," Judith Schaeffer, deputy legal director of People for the American Way, a Washington-based civil-rights organization told The Washington Post. "The idea that homosexuality is a condition from which one should be cured is old-fashioned bigotry passing as science."

But groups such as Evergreen disagree.

"Evergreen attests that individuals can overcome homosexual behavior and can diminish same-sex attraction," according to the group's mission statement. "Evergreen provides education, guidance and support to those involved in the transition from homosexuality."

The organization offers support groups, group counseling and sponsors sports activities. Evergreen organizers believe that sports are key. Many sexually confused men never were good at team sports and were teased for being sissies, they argue. Mastering baseball and basketball promotes masculinity, self-esteem and helps men see other males as pals, instead of potential sexual partners.
Mixed Message in Bishops’ Letter

Homosexual behavior still considered “immoral”

Washington, DC October 1, 1997 In a pastoral letter to American Catholics, the National Conference of Catholic Bishops yesterday urged parents of homosexual children to accept their children’s sexual orientation. The statement, a self-described “out-stretched hand,” still condemned sexual behavior outside of heterosexual marriage.

In the message entitled “Always Our Children,” the Bishops stress that the Church’s teachings on human dignity and respect be extended to all regardless of their sexual orientation. It provided suggestions for parents coming to terms with their children’s sexual orientation and integrating it with their religious beliefs.

The statement, however, makes a clear separation between sexual orientation and sexual behavior. While condemning discrimination against individuals on the basis of their sexual orientation, the statement reasserts the Church’s belief that homosexual behavior is “objectively immoral.” It reiterates that sexual relations are exclusively reserved for a married man and woman for the purpose of creating a new human life.

The following statement is attributable to Kerry Lobel, executive director of the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force:

“I welcome the open acknowledgment by the Bishops that a person’s sexual orientation should not be the basis of discrimination or injustice. Gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgendered people face discrimination every day, despite eleven states having outlawed such activity. I hope this open discussion within the Catholic Church will ease the pain of young people coming to grips with their sexual orientation. I reject their notion, however, that our behavior is immoral. We call on the Church to end its mixed message and recognize and affirm the loving relationships we have which cannot be separated from sexual expression.

The National Gay and Lesbian Task Force has worked to eliminate prejudice, violence and injustice against gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgendered people at the local, state and national level since its inception in 1973. As part of a broader social justice movement for freedom, justice and equality, NGLTF is creating a world that respects and celebrates the diversity of human expression and identity where all people may fully participate in society.

WASHINGTON, DC: On September 17, 1997 Vice President Al Gore addressed a crowd of about 300 people at the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force’s eighth annual “Honoring Our Allies” reception last Monday night in Washington, DC. The annual event honors those who make an extraordinary contribution to gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgendered (GLBT) communities.

In his remarks, the Vice President reaffirmed his commitment to fight against discrimination faced by members of the GLBT community. He also told the crowd that in addition to having a seat at the table, “everybody’s got to realize that as full members of the American family, it’s your table too.”

The Vice President came to pay tribute to Coretta Scott King.

John Sweeney, President of the AFL-CIO; and the Mautner Project, a health services organization for lesbians with cancer. All three were recipients of the 1997 Honoring Our Allies award. Senator Edward Kennedy (D-MA) introduced Mrs. King and renewed his commitment to pushing for passage of the Employment Nondiscrimination Act (ENDA).

In her acceptance speech, Mrs. King said in 1997, “Still hear from people who claim to be followers of Martin Luther King, Jr., but who think I should be silent about the human rights concerns of gays and lesbians.” She said the civil rights movement should be inclusive and unified. “All of us who oppose discrimination and support equal rights should stand together to resist every attempt to restrict civil rights in this country,” she added.

Echoing similar sentiments, Vice President Gore remarked that gays and lesbians “certainly have my commitment to work as hard as I can” to stop anti-gay hate crimes, find a cure for AIDS and end workplace discrimination. The Vice President, who was well-received by the crowd, also vowed to ensure gay and lesbian issues continue to have a place on the agenda of this Administration.

Vice President Gore reiterated the Administration’s commitment to combat hate crimes against members of minority groups, including the GLBT community. He spoke about the upcoming White House conference planned for November which is intended to focus attention on these acts of violence and ways to prevent them. “Some of the greatest challenges we face are not challenges of law but challenges of the heart,” said the Vice President. “Please be assured, you certainly have my commitment to work as hard as I can until the day we do reach those goals.”

Linda Chavez-Thompson, executive vice president of the AFL-CIO accepted the award for Mr. Sweeney. Chavez-Thompson, the highest ranking woman of color in the labor movement said, “your destiny and our destiny are linked.” Recalling an old Woody Guthrie song, she said “this land wasn’t made for the bigots who claim that their families and their marriages are threatened by your families and your marriages.

This land was made for you and me to live with dignity and security and equality and hope.”

Don’t forget the FREE test screening of BUDD YAM on Thursday afternoon (10/2) at 3:00. See last week’s missive for a description of the film or e-mail me if you want more information. I forgot to mention that the film is set in the 19th century which, at least to me, makes the sorcery aspect and the quest into unknown territory all the more intriguing.

At last we’re going to get to see THE FULL MONTY and judge for ourselves if it’s as funny as we’ve heard and deserves all the hype it’s been getting. Critics and audience have been lavish in their praise for this film and it’s been setting box office records in many theaters. Hopefully, that will be the case in Waterville. A few weeks ago it was the number five film in the country; not bad for an art-house film, especially because there were only 500 prints in circulation at the time. Many of the top grossing films had 1,500 or more prints on screen.

Sandra Haggard was the winner of last week’s trivia contest. Sandra and 22 others correctly identified Gena Rowlands as the star of her son Nick Cassavetes’ film, UNHOOK THE STARS. This week’s contest couldn’t be simpler: what does “the full monty” mean? I’ll accept the “correct” definition as well as any fake definitions you care to invent that I find amusing. All answers that fit the aforementioned criteria received before 9:30 on Friday morning (10/3) will be entered into a drawing for 2 tickets to THE FULL MONTY.

As always, you can get descriptions, dates and times of all the films we’re showing, on our web site located at http://www.mint.net/movies.

Book Review:
Cemetery Murders

by C.M. Brennan

So much in our culture has been predicated upon the notion of "if it works, it must be good...don't fix it". Why tinker with success? Look what happened to Coca-Cola! However, this does not mean that any one prefabricated product or idea is any better for your body and soul than Wonder Bread.

Such is the problem with Jean Marcy's debut novel, Cemetery Murders. Cemetery Murders is yet another in a long line of cookie-cutter dyketective novels, in which the lonely but stoic PI (who is, of course, a brunette), battles her lust for the frigid-but-alluring cop/rival PI/S/M diva/supermarket checkout girl (who is, invariably, a blonde) with more gusto than she chases the story's evil-doer. (How one can find frigidity alluring is beyond me, but I think there's a 12-step program for those who suffer.) That the lone lesbian PI eventually succeeds in nailing the "bad guy" despite her difficulty in remaining vertical is quite remarkable.

There is little point in sketching a plot line: they are infinitely interchangeable, like Legos, regardless of author, publisher, or proposed scenario.

Granted, this type of reading material is not intended to encourage conscious thought in the reader. Rather, it is a fairly banal means of suspending all brain activity and whiling away a rainy Saturday afternoon.

Readers who yearn for books with substance would do well to pass by the marshmallow fluff of the dyketective novel series (any and all of them). And if you cannot find the substance you are looking for, write your own damn book. Why more women do not is a true lesbian mystery.

Romantic Piano Sensation
Returns to Portland

Jim Brickman, the Composer, pianist and performer whose dreamily romantic piano artistry and high-spirited, witty interaction with his audiences have made him one of America's most popular new concert performers.

Brickman has been called a songwriter of the nineties, who combines romantic lyricism with top forty hits. He revealed a whole new musical canvas earlier this year with the release of Picture this, which include the hit single "Valentine." A simple romantic ballad with vocals by country artist Martina McBride, the song gave Brickman his first number one hit at Adult Contemporary Radio.

His other top ten singles have included the popular songs "Angel Eyes" and "If You Believe" from his Windham Hill recording By Heart, and "Hero's Dream," a song he wrote for NBC-TV coverage of the Summer Olympics in Atlanta. He became the first solo piano artist ever to appear on the pop charts with "Rocket to the Moon" from his first album, No Words.

Brickman selections with vocals are sung in concert by his long-time vocalist, Anne Cochran, who began singing with him when they were both high school students in Cleveland.

From his beginnings as a top-ranked commercial jingle writer, Brickman has developed into a nationally-recognized concert performer, recording artist and host of a nationally-syndicated radio show.

Jim Brickman will be performing at the Merrill Auditorium November 13, 1997 8:00 PM. Brickman selections with vocals are sung by his long-time high school friend Anne Cochran.

Bi Space: “Bi 101”

by Bobbi Keppel and Pete Chvany

Last month Bobbi and I introduced ourselves. This month, while Bobbi’s on vacation, I’ll discuss bisexuality as an “orientation.” Think of this column as a course in Bisexuality 101. Don’t worry: no quizzes!

It’s important when talking about sexuality to distinguish “orientations” from people’s behavior, attractions, fantasies, and identities. Let’s take a concrete example. A straight friend recently told me that he slept with both males and females in bis youth.

He said that he enjoyed his same-sex experiences, but that women had consistently attracted him more powerfully than men. Since he is monogamous and married, he chooses to identify as straight. An observer might note his “bisexual” history and his potential for future bisexual or even exclusively gay behavior.

But since that potential appears small, his self-identification seems consistent. Perhaps in fantasy my friend’s feelings for men differ from his outward expressions. But maybe he fantasizes about women while staying monogamous with his wife. Many people prefer to keep their fantasies fantastic.

I know a gay man who has been strongly attracted to a few women and a straight woman who loves Dana Scully from “The X-Files.” These folks behave consistently with their identities, though their attractions and fantasies sometimes go in other directions.

With these distinctions in mind, we can define bisexuality several ways. In one sense, bisexuality is just the ability to be attracted, sexually and romantically, to people of more than one gender. This definition focuses on emotional qualities, on attractions and fantasies. (It often implies that the attraction is to the two better-known genders of male and female, but there can be overlaps between the bi and transgender communities as well.)

We can also think of bisexuality as an identity which considers the ability to be attracted to members of more than one gender important. Some bi folk have attractions to both genders but have not yet found circumstances that feel right for expressing them for one gender.

We live in a culture which regards direct experience as the best proof of a person’s “real feelings.” But the feelings of gay and lesbian youth who know they are only attracted to their own gender before they have had sex make it reasonable for some people to identify as bi, even if they are celibate or have only had sexual relationships with one gender so far.

Clearly one can also identify as bisexual given one’s sexual and emotional history of involvement with people of more than one gender. A woman in a long-term monogamous lesbian relationship might still identify as bisexual if she considered previous relationships with both men and women important to her self-conception.

And some bisexuals identify as both* gay/lesbian and bisexual depending on the context. When coming out, I knew that many people who don’t understand bisexuality would see me as a gay man. I decided to get comfortable with this “mistake,” and to proudly call myself a gay man at times, because disavowing my homosexuality would be homophobic.

The fact that my behavior is not exclusively homosexual is a separate issue from my commitment to ending the oppression of gay men and lesbians. As another friend put it, “someone can identify as bisexual and have attractions to, fantasies about, romantic relationships, and sex with members of more than one gender.

However, one can identify as gay, lesbian, or straight as have all these, also. And one can identify as bisexual and NOT have one or more of these.”

Next month, we’ll discuss some common myths and stereotypes about bi’s and bisexuality. Till then, class dismissed!

Trans Forum: As I was saying.......

by Daralyn S Maxwell

It becomes obvious, even and especially to someone for whom there are no immediate benefits, that in order to have a solid and cohesive community, there needs to be participation of some sort from all quarters.

Of late I have noticed that, despite the best of intentions, the actual activity generated by various members of the (gay) community always seems to rest on a few intrepid souls while the rest of the populace does a fair bit of armchair quarterbacking, second-guessing, and out and out criticism of those who are actually working for the common good. The question becomes: The common good of whom?

I will remove myself as a beneficiary of this because the Christians aren’t interested in transgendered women at the moment. On top of that, even if the Equal Rights bill withstands the latest “wrath of God,” nowhere does it specify that I or any other transgendered person will enjoy the same protection under the law that the rest of the gay community will. But where are the people who will be enjoying this?

There is a lot of The Little Red Hen in this scenario, mostly because no one wants to pick the wheat (get signatures), chase the wheat (help raise money OR contribute), mill the flour (show up for anything as a sign of support), or bake the bread (all of the above!). The fact is that for every reason why someone should be involved, they find a myriad reasons why they shouldn’t.

In the end, though, if the measure is defeated by a rollback referendum, where do we place the blame?

Let’s start with MLGPA; undermanned and underfunded. Moving on to MWD, half of the community has MWD out of the picture as out of the loop. So who’s in the loop? And when is this loop going to manifest itself into something tangible that coordinates and energizes people to make a stand that they have had enough of being discriminated against? And why would I, as a transgendered person, get all riled up this way? Very simple: I’m next.

When the time comes that the community has what they want then I and others like me are going to ask for OUR place in the sun. If I stand around deciding that this issue or that issue doesn’t suit me at the moment because it won’t afford me immediate relief, then I am truly not looking ahead at the long-term, and my future will be as shaky as the amount of effort I did not put into it. And where, you might ask, are MY solutions? I didn’t say I had any.

However, I do think that in the long run it is in the best interest of every member of the g/l/b/t community to extend themselves just that little bit extra. You don’t have to be rich to send MLGPA, MWD or some other useful organization your anonymous $10. You don’t have to be OUT to patronize a business that is gay-owned, gay-friendly and in need of your patronage. You certainly don’t have to put your picture in the paper that you made some phone calls or stuffed envelopes.

What you do have to do is think about the people fighting for you. While you are doing that, write your own letter to a company that you know has discriminatory practices; boycott a business that you know doesn’t support the community; let others know what you are up to, and be receptive to their ideas and input.

While I am not necessarily an immediate beneficiary of forward politics, I am assured that whenever equal rights encompassing ALL members of the HUMAN community become a reality, I will know that I wasn’t snoozing on the sidelines because it was less painful than extending myself that little bit. Besides, it is OUR community, and those damn Christians can’t have it!

Your choice: Be heard, and get to the polls, or get cozy with your closet.

Cranky Observations

by C.M. Brennan

All this blather from Michael Heath and the Christian Civic League has me pondering the ramifications of this new referendum drive. Suppose it were to succeed? Beyond all effort, all desire to defeat the paranoid legions, what if they pull it off? Oh, it's a very scary thought....the kind that ruins entire evenings and healthy appetites. If there are no assurances for equal access to housing, jobs, credit and services for gays and lesbians, does that mean, by extension, there is also no assurance for similarly equal access for heterosexuals?

Here's a snide and biting thought: What if all lesi/gay/bi/trans proprietors and business folk ran their operations with an eye toward curbing the heterosexual menace? They with their amazing capacity for reproduction, hypocritical religious views, and government tax breaks! It's enough to make any struggling homofamily sick — why can't those straight people pony up a buck and pay their way like we do? Sure would improve the economy! And so, the mood sweeps from a gent in Portland Obscenities to a highly active location for sexual obscenity ordinance.

Earlier this year the Fine Arts Cinema was denied it's license to operate as possibly the last chapter in an ongoing battle over sexual activity there. The City of Portland has followed up that move with an effective door shutting decision by an obscenity jury to fine the Treasure Chest, a small adult video and print store, thousands of dollars for violating Portland's obscenity ordinance.

The fine Arts was reputed to be a highly active location for sexual activity within the theater's audience area and secluded niches. That reputation coupled with the City's and community's perceived state of denial over risky and generally obscene behavior prompted Rick McPheason, a former Casco Weekly article contributor, to submit a published article on the theater.

The subsequent Police raid and arrests led to outrage in Portland's gay and lesbian community, along with a resentment of Police Chief Chitwood and both CBW and McPheason. The outrage was further fueled by the timing of the article, just weeks before a major statewide vote on anti-gay legislation.

The recent denial of license to the Theater follows continue allegations of "gross sexual activity" that assists Portland Police Chief Chitwood's attempts to shut the Fine Arts down. Chitwood has referred to the Theater as a "slime pit" causing many to believe that along with other similar activity by Chitwood is evidence of a larger plan to regulate morality.

The situation has become more complicated with Council Geraghty, whose district includes the Fine Arts, known as Waynes', had viewing booths with large waist height holes drilled between the booths, as the owner claimed, to allow ventilation. The City did not accept that description of the holes, nor accept the activity similar to the Fine Arts that was reputed to occur there.

The shop was forced to close the holes and clean up it's act, eventually reopening. The subject of the Fine Arts, Rick McPheason's commentaries and the Treasure Chest have also been largely debated publicly. The pages of recent issues of the Casco Bay Weekly and the Treasure Chest have also been bombarded with emails debating morality, enforcement, and again, the new San Francisco bound McPheason.
Christianity Choice

by Emuel Vassey

What I don't get is why more people (myself included) don't counter the "lifestyle choice" argument by pointing out that religious belief and practice is even more clearly a "lifestyle choice." Nobody is innately Christian, or Muslim, or Hindu, or Jewish (in the sense of faith, not ethnic origin). They are raised in and indoctrinated into these faith traditions. This renders their entire argument moot, because they then have no rational defense for giving "their" lifestyle choice special rights (we know they already have them, but it would make them own up to it) when that’s what they claim to be against.

They can’t argue morality, either, because many things a Christian would consider benign (e.g., eating pork or cheeseburgers) would be morally repugnant to a Muslim or orthodox Jew, and not all faith traditions are homophobic (my own religious belief is that queerness is next to godliness:). They can claim divine authority all they want, but unless they can prove which divinity, or interpretation of any particular divinity, is the true authority (Will the real God please stand up.) That entire argument falls into meaninglessness, leaving them with nothing but "because I said so."

I think getting to that point would make it a lot easier for us to counter their other lies, because it’s what helps make their filth so palatable to the fence-sitters in the first place. Furthermore, I think it would make people face up to the indoctrinated sexphobia that makes many otherwise "liberal" people uncomfortable with us in the first place. Not that it would fix things magically, but it’s a strategy I haven’t heard discussed and I’ve felt for some time that it deserves consideration. Any thoughts?

Letter to the Editor: Equal Not Special

Ted Blanche had something with his suggestion of Equal Not Special. In my local edition of the Lewiston Sun yesterday there was a "Heard on the Street" which asked people in Jay and Livermor Falls "Do you think there should be a special law to forbid discrimination against gays and lesbians?" You can imagine the responses to this leading question.

They handed these folks the word "special." They showed six responses. One woman just did the "against god’s law" thing. One woman actually responded that people should all be treated the same, no matter what they do in bed (Hooray- but only one out of six!) Another said that we did nothing! Another said that we did things magically, but it’s a strategy I haven’t heard discussed and I’ve felt for some time that it deserves consideration. Any thoughts?

They need to hear stories of discrimination in housing, jobs, etc. Yes, I know we did all this at the hearing, but that "special rights" lie is very powerful! I believe we also need to call them on that lie. When our enemies say "special rights" why don’t we ask them why they are lying? Especially since this is also becoming a moral issue. Hello!! Homosexuality is not even mentioned in the 10 commandments, but lying sure is.

So people out there are hearing this powerful lie about "special rights." It’s only natural that they resent that, after all, many or us resent that legal marriage confers many special rights we do not have access to. I think we have to do our best to kill the "special rights" argument.

They think we are covered under the constitution already, and must be looking for some "extraz."

The worst part of this little newspaper item was the response from the man who said, "I don’t believe that we should discriminate, but creating a special law for gays and lesbians increased the discrimination against straight people and religious groups." I know this guy. He could not think of this himself. I know he’s beating what he has been told at his church. He goes to a RRR church. These are the places I bet many of those signatures came from. They listen to a long, long rant from the pulpit- partially scripted by Pat Robertson probably- they get all worked up hearing these lies and are asked to sign the petition that will save the Grand State of Maine from going straight to Hell! (Ever notice no one ever goes GAY to Hell?) They are told that if anyone ever disagrees with them, that means they are being discriminated against!

Ok, enough of a rant. I really get worked up about this LYING! Can you tell? "SPECIAL RIGHTS! IS A LIE! NO ONE IS ASKING FOR SPECIAL RIGHTS- JUST EQUAL RIGHTS!!!!

Mainly Numbers

By The Number Guy

This is the first installment of what I hope will be a regular column in Community Pride Reporter. After all, a newspaper with an editor named Angel should have at least one regular New Agey feature. Don't you agree?

My topic will be numerology, sometimes called number mysticism. Numerology is obscure, even by the already esoteric standards of the occult. Generally, astrology, which is not only vastly more popular, but also considered by many to be more profound, overshadows numerology.

I think astrology and numerology spring from different aspects of the human experience, and as a result, each has particular strengths. In this column I want to briefly discuss one element of basic numerology - the karmic numbers. But before I do, let me explain some of the most basic elements of numerology.

Numerologists believe that each of the numbers 0 through 9 has a specific meaning and that larger numbers and letters can be reduced to each of these numbers. The number 10, for instance, can be reduced to 1 (1+0=1). The number 22 can be reduced to 4 (2+2=4).

Letters can be reduced simply noting their position in the alphabet. For example, A is 1, B is 2, C is 3 and so forth. X, the 24th letter of alphabet, reduces to 6 (2+4=6), K, the 11th letter, reduces to 2 (1+1=2), etc. (See the chart below).

Numerology Conversion Chart

| A | B | C | D | E | F | G | H | I | J | K | L | M | N | O | P | Q | R | S | T | U | V | W | X | Y | Z |
| 1 | 2 | 3 | 4 | 5 | 6 | 7 | 8 | 9 | 10 | 11 | 12 | 13 | 14 | 15 | 16 | 17 | 18 | 19 | 20 | 21 | 22 | 23 | 24 | 25 | 26 |

1776 would equal 7 (July is the 7th month) plus 4 (the day of the month) plus 3 (1+7+7+6+2+1=3) for a total of 5.

Okay. Now, let's learn about karmic numbers. The numbers that aren't in your name tell a Numerologer almost as much as the numbers that are. These missing digits represent karmic lessons, the areas of human experience you must learn more about in your present life.

Discovering your karmic lesson numbers is very simple. Using the chart below, convert the letters in your name to their numeric equivalents. Note any missing letters. See if you are missing ALL the letters in your name. If so, that number is one of your karmic lessons. For example, if you are missing all the "one" letters (A, J, and S), your karmic lesson number would be "one." Many people will find they have more than one karmic lesson. And some people will discover they are not missing any numbers at all.

This is the karmic lesson of "zero." The meanings of each karmic lesson follow.

Zero Karmic Lesson: No missing numbers. This generally suggests that the person is here to work on everything in this life, instead of on one or more particular areas.

One Karmic Lesson: Missing One (A, J, and S). One is the self, and a lack of one suggests difficulty in taking the initiative, being a leader, and standing up for oneself. A great reluctance to take risks may also be present. People missing the number one will find themselves in situations requiring them to assert themselves.

Two Karmic Lesson: Missing Two (B, K, and T). The number two represents partnerships. Those missing two in their name will have difficulty getting along with others, particularly one-on-one. Often, people missing two are hypersensitive, overreacting to real or imagined slights. Sometimes they are extremely tactless. In either case, they would benefit from developing better interpersonal skills.

Three Karmic Lesson: Missing Three (C, L, and U). This is the challenge of self-expression and less often, of learning to enjoy life. Those missing three in their name will benefit from working on their speaking and writing skills, and from any activities which encourage creative expression. Attention to the appearance is also important. Sometimes those missing three will also find it difficult to take pleasure in life. Such people will benefit from socializing, entertaining, travel, and similar activities, as well as from cultivating a positive attitude.

Four Karmic Lesson: Missing Four (D, M, and V). Four is the number of work. Those lacking it will have great difficulty in taking projects of all sorts from beginning to end in a methodical way. They may also find themselves lacking in common sense or simply have poor decision-making abilities. People missing four will benefit from creating orderly lives that stress hard work and logical thinking.

Five Karmic Lesson: Missing Five (E, N, and W). A lack of five suggests a lack of desire to be broadened by experience. There will likely be a disinterest in travel, freedom, change, and excitement of all sorts. The person may be rigid and dislike interaction with others. This is probably the rarest karmic lesson; I do not believe I have ever met anyone without E, N or W in their name.

Six Karmic Lesson: Missing Six (F, O, and X). Six will bring lessons relating to responsibility, particularly as it applies to committed relationships and the family. Often, such people are capricious in relationships. They may abandon committed relationships for questionable reasons and then live to regret the decision. Similarly, they may get into relationships without appropriate forethought and be unhappy. People with six karmic lesson would be wise to nurture their sense of duty towards those close to them, and to avoid impulsively getting into or out of relationships.

Seven Karmic Lesson: Missing Seven (G, F, and Y). Seven is the lesson of the spirit; that the world of the senses is only a part of what is. I find this karmic lesson to be the most fascinating, because it frequently manifests in interesting ways. An example: a friend with seven karma grew up in a house with poisonous snakes in the basement. These poisonous snakes were not native to the area, occurred nowhere else nearby, and could not be removed by any means. The lessons of seven are not always so colorful, but generally odd events come into the life, often of an occult, religious, spiritual, or less often, scientific nature.

Eight Karmic Lesson: Missing Eight (H, Q, and Z). Eight is the the opposite lesson to seven; it is the lesson that the material world is important. People with this karmic lesson would be advised to learn to value money and material things appropriately; not to undervalue or overvalue them. Typically, a person with eight karma will receive a substantial sum of money at some time in his or her life, mismanage it, and live to regret it. Often, people with eight karma have little discipline or good sense in financial matters, and this makes their lives much more difficult than they would otherwise be. Less often, eight brings lessons about the proper use of power.

Nine Karmic Lesson: Missing Nine (I, and R). Nine is the lesson of spiritual love, and will bring experiences probably unwelcome which develop compassion. The person missing nine is likely to be lacking in humanitarian feelings, which may manifest in any number of ways: intolerance, selfishness, and an inability to give freely of one's emotions, and so forth. Like five, nine is a rare karmic lesson. I believe the karmic lessons are very important. In many lives, they are strong obstacles, and the proper understanding of them can be key to making material and spiritual progress.

Healing Technology Explained in Portland

Gentle Wind Project, completely restores a person's energetic structure when held only one time for three minutes. This unique healing will be available, at no charge, to everyone attending a Portland seminar hosted by the Kittery-based, non-profit would heal organization on October 19th.

The Gentle wind researchers, former social workers, educators, and therapists, believe that life’s hurts and wounds are stored in the energetic structure, or aura, resulting in impaired human functioning. The Project’s healing technology improves the quality of people’s lives and greatly relieves much of the human suffering that is inherent in life.

One aspect to this healing restores the sense of “belongingness” in gay people who may have been hurt through cultural and social prejudices. While this healing technology has nothing to do with trying to alter a person’s sexual orientation, it does clarify all aspects of life-relationships being just one part.

A gay friend who I introduced to the work of Gentle Wind reported to me that, after years of confusion and isolation, she “feels part of life now.” She explains, “I used to feel like an observer, separate from the life that was going on around me. Although I was productive and had happy times in my life, I could never call myself a happy person. I now feel like I belong, and can honestly say that I’m happy. I am so relieved and truly amazed by the difference.”

Eye on Equality: Telling Truths

Like many people, I have found myself moved by the death of Diana, Princess of Wales. While it is true that I am a soft touch for determined blonde femmes with strong social convictions, I also appreciate that Diana sought to provide comfort for others while at the same time Adrienne Rich got word that she had been selected to receive the prestigious National Medal for the Arts. Each year, the award is given to twelve recipients. She turned the Medal down flat because accepting it would be viewed as condoning the Administration’s social policies with which she disagrees. She wrote to Jane Alexander, chair of the National Endowment for the Arts, “A President cannot meaningfully honor certain token artists while the people at large are so dishonored.”

As Rich said to journalist Laura Flanders, “You know, I really wouldn’t mandate what someone else should do in a situation like this, and as I’ve said there’s no simple formula for the relationships of art to justice. I did what I had to do because of who I am.”

As Rich says in “Women and Honor: Some Notes on Lying” (from “On Lying, Secrets and Silence: Selected Prose 1966-1978”), “Truthfulness anywhere means a heightened complexity...The politics worth having, the relationships worth having, demand that we delve still deeper.”

And, each of these women has. Each came to their political work from widely divergent starting places. Each was passionately and tirelessly driven to tell the truth in their own way. Each teaches us that truth-telling transforms both the teller and those of us who listen.

As Rich says, “...truth is not one thing, or even a system. It is an increasing complexity.” The stories each of us tells about our lives and our willingness to dig deep and take risks, transforms not only our own gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgender community, but the lives of millions around the world.

It is this transformation connecting personal to political action each day of our lives, that makes social change. Eye on Equality is a monthly column that discusses or gives commentary on national and state-level political events or provides a behind-the-scenes look at social movements and trends. The column is written by Kerry Lobel, Executive Director of the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force.
Lisa and Susanne Clements are pleased to announce the opening of the first, all-inclusive, personal introduction service. Many people whom they know have little opportunity to meet potential companions because of their busy schedules or because they require the confidentiality that other venues do not provide.

Although public awareness is slowly changing toward people who live in alternative lifestyle, it is still difficult to meet potential companions with whom you may share interests and values. Thus, Rainbow Circle of Friends was born. Rainbow Circle of Friends is the only personal introduction service to serve diverse populations regardless of sexual orientation.

Lisa used to work for a company which called itself the most well known dating service in the world, it probably has more offices than anyone else, and is well known. The problem she felt was that they were very exclusive as to who they offered their services to.

"I took it personally that they were exclusive because I have friends who are gay and lesbian, and I know how hard it is to come out, one of my friends that I’ve had for 16 years who’s known that I’m open minded and nonjudgmental and I have friends that are gay and lesbian and bisexual just came out to me recently and I know how hard that was for her to do that. I feel that our service will be valuable to people, number one because not as many women as men are out and I’ve had some calls from people from the add in CPR, the women I talked to weren’t out, if anything maybe this service will help people realize that they’re not different that they can be accepted, I don’t know if it will help any one who isn’t out to come out.

Lisa has also begun to speak at support groups about Rainbow Circle of Friends service.. SeaCoast Gay Men’s Gender Talk North and a new women’s group called Lady Bugs are among the groups she’s spoken to. She welcomes the opportunity to speak to any group. “One of the things I realized we were faced with, Susanne and I not being gay, was the fact that there are issues that we not even be aware of even though we have gay friends.” With that knowledge they decided that it would be very important to bring people on board from different backgrounds from the community that people would feel comfortable working with. “We’re looking for people in Maine who would like to work for us and welcome anyone in the area to come work for us.”

RCF has a very basic low pressure process when you call, when someone calls they thank them for calling into Rainbow and let the caller know that they are an all inclusive service. The caller is then asked if they wouldn’t mind answering a few general intake questions. Name, address and phone number is requested but only if the caller feels comfortable should they answer. RCF doesn’t believe in pushing anyone into anything as other high pressure dating services are prone to do. “We want to provide a better more personal service. We take the information down, they ask how much it will cost and we tell them. They ask if they are interested in casual dating or serious relationships, one referral or three, we match by goals computability, we wouldn’t mix casual with serious. We network people from state to state.

After the initial telephone interview if the caller wants to purchase the service and everyone is comfortable they meet personally with the applicant.

This service is also for people with disabilities and is truly an all inclusive, personal and confidential. Rainbow Consultants have training and education in diversity, special needs, sexual orientation and gender all deserve a chance for happiness.

One Lesbian caller asked how someone straight could find her a date? Good point! This is another reason the owners feel it is important to have people from the populations they’re trying to serve working with them.

Rainbow Circle of Friends serves Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts and helps people who want to relocate. The service is strictly personal and confidential. Rainbow Consultants have training and education in health, civil rights, special services, aids awareness and human relations. Research has found that human companionship and being in love is good for your health. Start improving your health today by contacting Rainbow Circle of Friends toll-free at 888-899-RCOF.
