Tourist Towns Consider Equal Rights Ordinances

BAR HARBOR, Maine (AP) Two tourist towns have taken cautious first steps that could lead to adoption of local gay rights ordinances following last month's statewide vote that deleted sexual orientation from Maine's human rights code.

Bar Harbor and Camden voted about 3-1 in favor of the gay rights legislation that was narrowly defeated in the Feb. 10 referendum, and some residents suggest that the towns should enact anti-discrimination measures of their own.

Should that happen, the two coastal towns would join Portland and Long Island as the only Maine communities with such ordinances on the books.

Gay rights supporters in Camden and Bar Harbor indicated that their stance was motivated by economic considerations as well as by a desire to outlaw discrimination against homosexuals in such areas as housing, jobs and public accommodations.

Chamber of commerce officials in the two towns expressed fear that some would-be vacationers may boycott all of Maine this summer without realizing that Camden and Bar Harbor lined up solidly in favor of gay rights.

After two of its members raised the issue Tuesday night, the Bar Harbor Town Council voted to ask the town attorney to draft an ordinance that would a focus for debate at a future meeting.

The night before, Camden real estate broker Susan Dorr asked the Board of Selectmen to adopt a gay rights measure.

"It just makes use of the very clear message that Camden voters have said twice on this matter," said Dorr, who pointed to the town's strong anti-discrimination stance in two statewide votes.

"This is an important area to explore, to say unequivocally that Camden won't discriminate," she said.

While expressing support for gay rights, selectmen instructed the town attorney to review the legal ramifications and advised the town manager to seek information on local anti-discrimination ordinances.

A leader in the gay rights campaign, Karen Geraghty of Maine Won't Discriminate, said she could understand the frustration of townspeople that prompted the local efforts but reiterated that a statewide law was the ideal solution.

"Every citizen in Maine ought to have the same basic rights," Geraghty said. "I don't think that if you grow up in Bangor that you ought to have to move to Portland or Camden or any other place in order to have protection against discrimination."

Horror Writer's Gift Funds Shelter For Abused Mothers And Children

BATH, Maine (AP) Stephen King, whose best-selling novel "Rose Madder" focused on the impact of domestic violence, has donated $50,000 to Family Crisis Services to open a shelter in Bath for abused women and children.

The gift was among the latest examples of low-key philanthropy by King and his wife Tabitha, whose past donations have benefited the University of Maine, the Bangor Public Library and Little League baseball, among others.

Backers had hoped to open the shelter later this spring in a house with a tenant whose rent would help pay the mortgage. Thanks to the Kings' gift, the entire building will be used as a shelter and renovations will be completed earlier than first anticipated.

Lois Reckitt, director of Family Crisis Services, said the check arrived Christmas Eve, at a time when the financial outlook for the planned shelter was uncertain.

"We started dancing around and hugging each other in the office," Reckitt said. "That's how huge a gift it was for us."

The Kings, who live in Bangor, have a policy of not commenting on their charitable efforts.

Bowdoin Seeks Answer To Discrimination Concerns

Brunswick, Maine (AP) The president of Bowdoin College said he thinks new programs will dispel concerns about discrimination raised in a national survey of students at four-year private colleges.

President Robert Edwards was dismayed when the survey found that Bowdoin students reported a higher-than-average perception of discrimination against women, minorities, the disabled, and lesbians and gays.

The graduating seniors told Higher Education Research Institute that 45 percent of their classmates were prejudiced against women and 55 percent were biased against Hispanics, blacks and Asians.

Between 54 percent and 69 percent said they observed discrimination against those groups, as well as lesbians and gays.

"I absolutely think those numbers are going to change," Edwards said. "I think this campus is fundamentally right-minded, and we have to be eternally vigilant to be our best selves."

He pointed to a number of programs the college has created that he hopes will change students' perceptions.

For example, there is now more faculty and staff discussion about discrimination, Edwards said. Also, the college created a new sexual harassment policy and gave a professor six months off to study the role of women at the college, he said.

Bowdoin also has an ongoing mentoring program that matches minority students with minority alumni. And it has barred fraternities, which attracted more white men than women and minorities.

Betty Trout-Kelly, who works with Edwards' office on minority issues, has spent the last eight years trying to make Bowdoin more hospitable to its Hispanic, black and Asian students.

She said many Bowdoin professors still express shock that some of those students do well in class.

"What they do often is assume they don't know the answers," she said. As a result, she said, the students are invisible in classes and can become alienated from their peers.

Part of Edwards' solution is to attract more black, Asian and Hispanic professors. Bates College in Lewiston has 26 minority professors, nearly twice Bowdoin's number, officials said.

Hate Group Takes Message To The internet

By Eddie Pells

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) Hate groups are on the rise, boosted by the Internet and white-power rock music.

In its quarterly report on extremist organizations, the Southern Poverty Law Center said Tuesday that it counted 474 hate groups nationwide in 1997, a 20 percent increase over 1996. Some of the groups have Web pages.

"It's cheap, it's efficient, it gives you instant communication," project director Joe Roy said. "You can reach anywhere with it. It's a great format to communicate, vent your frustrations."

Among the groups cited in the report was Detroit-based Resistance Records, a company that distributes CDs with racially tinged lyrics.

The report called Resistance Records one of the more sophisticated hate groups. "You look at their magazine, the albums and they're very professional," extremist-group expert Michael Barkun said in the report.

Executives of the company didn't immediately return calls for comment.

The Southern Poverty Law Center, founded in the 1970s to battle discrimination against minorities, won major legal fights against the Ku Klux Klan and other white supremacist groups.

A separate report by two gay advocacy groups Tuesday said anti-gay violence and harassment increased nationwide by 2 percent last year in 14 areas around country.

There were 2,445 documented cases of anti-gay violence and harassment last year in the 14 areas, according to the report by the National Coalition of Anti-Violence Programs and the New York City Gay & Lesbian Anti-Violence Project.

However, the number of murders related to anti-gay violence dropped to 18 in 1997 from 27 in 1996, according to the report, based on data gathered by unofficial local groups.

The 14 areas tracked were New York City; Los Angeles; San Francisco; California's central coast; Chicago; Cleveland; Columbus, Ohio; Washington, D.C.; Detroit; El Paso, Texas; Massachusetts; Phoenix; St. Louis; and Virginia.

Over 100 High Schools Colleges and Universities to Participate in 1998 National Day of Silence.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, VA The National Day of Silence, the largest national (US) lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender (lgbt) awareness event run by and for youth, will take place on April 8, 1998. Already more than 100 high schools, colleges and universities have signed on to participate.

The first Day of Silence was held at the university of Virginia in April 1996 and has since spread nationwide.

On the National Day of Silence, supporters of lgbt rights take a nine-hour vow of silence (8 AM - 5 PM) to draw attention to the silence that homophobia causes.

Instead of speaking, participants hand out cards that read: "Please understand my reasons for not speaking today. I support lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender rights. People who are silent today believe that laws and attitudes should be inclusive of people of all sexual orientations.

The Day of Silence is to draw attention to those who have been silenced by hatred, oppression, and prejudice. Think about the voices you are not hearing. What can you do to end the silence?"

After the silence hours, organizers hold events to further educate people about homophobia and other lgbt issues.

The National Day of Silence is organized by a volunteer staff of full time students. Jessie Gilliam and Maria Pulzetti, co-chairs of the event, are featured in the "Profile in Courage" in the March issue of Oasis Magazine (www.oasismag.com).

They have also been invited to appear as keynote speakers at Youth Pride Day in Washington, D.C. on April 18.

National Day of Silence Co-chair Maria Pulzetti comments, "I have watched this event grow from a first-time event at a conservative university to a national and even international movement of youth working to end homophobia.

The strength of this event lies in the fact that it fills a real need for solidarity among youth concerned about lgbt rights. The National Day of Silence is the only national event created and organized by youth. The collective statement we make is staggering."

The National Day of Silence has received organizational endorsements from the Gay Lesbian Straight Education Network (GLSEN), Universal Fellowship of Metropolitan Community Churches (UFMCC), Advocates for Youth, !OutProud!, And Justice for All, and Youth Guardian Services.

If you or someone you know attends a school, college, or youth group and would like to participate in the National Day of Silence, please contact your regional coordinator (see web page, <http://www.youth-guard.org/ndos>) or send e-mail inquiries to mkp6n@unix.virginia.edu.

Dance Gives Gay Teens A Night Of Comfort

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) With the teen-agers clustering around the dee jay and the chaperones roaming the room, the Universalist Church event had all the elements of the typical high school dance.

But this was different. The dozens of teens who spent Saturday night dancing with their friends found a comfort level they don't find elsewhere.

The approximately 50 teens are gay, lesbian and bisexual. The dance was the fourth of its kind sponsored by Concord Outright, a group that also organizes support meetings for gay teen-agers.

"Out in the world, even if somebody is not discriminating, you're always afraid," said Carey Harris, a senior at John Stark Regional High School. "Here it doesn't matter. No one judges you. This is open, and it's really nice."

The goal of the dance is "to have a situation where kids feel safe," said Knox Turner, Concord Outright administrator.

At other dances, "they can't bring the person they really want to dance with," Turner said. "These kids are struggling with what they believe is a very hostile environment."

A 17-year-old Goffstown student said coming to the dance made him realize he's not alone.

"I got to a high school where no one else is out," he said. "Just being with people who know what I went through, those are very important things."

Besides support and understanding, the dance gives the teen-agers the chance to meet potential dates, something they say isn't easy in New Hampshire.

"Every chance I get, I want to go to New York, San Francisco or Boston," said Tami Webster, 19, of Manchester. "I think in general, cities are more accepting. There's more diversity all around so all the attention isn't focused on you."

Girls, Women And Boys Trek To Feminist Summit

By Paisley Dodds

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) Self-esteem is in. Skinny models are out. And it's high time for a female president.

Meet the young feminists.

"A lot of people don't understand that feminism isn't just about women, it's about equal rights," says Zachary Bowman, an 18-year-old high school student from Portland, Maine. "Not all women are supermodels. Not all men like to play sports. Not all people are treated equally. That's what it's about."

About 700 feminists ranging from 8- to 80-years-old trekked to Massachusetts this weekend for the Young Feminist Summit, sponsored by the National Organization for Women.

Participants broke off into groups to talk about how women are portrayed in the media, how welfare reform will affect the poor, about rape and teen pregnancy.

The aim of the conference was to bring together men and women of all ages to talk about issues facing feminism today, said N.O.W. President Patricia Ireland.

"This is not our mothers' movement anymore," Ireland said in an interview on Saturday. "Those who see that there is still inequality, those who are not lulled by complacency, seem to link together these days. It's only natural that some of the people are men, and even boys."

About 70 young men showed up for the summit. Bowman, three other young men, and about 20 young women sat cross-legged and spent more than an hour cutting out magazine advertisements they felt "dissed" women.

"Yea, of course we still think that models are beautiful. But what we want to do is teach people that only about 5 percent of the world's population has the genetic makeup of supermodels," said Bowman, who volunteers in an abuse-prevention program targeted at young people.

Zachary's group pasted supermodel Naomi Campbell's face onto a Rubenesque body clad in sweatpants.

Anna Bullet's group pasted an "X" cut from a mascara ad over a picture of a bare-legged woman.

"We're tired of looking at half-naked women in magazines," said the 13-year-old from Auburn Middle School in Auburn, Maine. "We don't want to read articles about how to get a man or how to please a man. We want to read articles about how to be happy or about issues affecting us."

Ireland said the faces at the summit show that real progress has been made in the women's rights movement, but there's still work to be done.

"We now have laws that call for equal pay for equal work. We now have laws to protect against harassment. We have access to birth control. When I come here and see that these kids are lightyears ahead where we were 30 years ago, it makes me feel great."

Thorton Students Agree To Stop Harassment

Saco, Maine (AP) Two Saco teen-agers accused of harassing a fellow Thornton Academy student because they thought he was gay have signed an agreement to stay away from him.

Assistant Attorney General Stephen Wessler said Corey Gaumont and Ryan Kerry, both 16, signed consent agreements this week.

Wessler said the consent agreement is not an admission of guilt, but would protect the victim from future harassment by the boys.

The boys were charged with the civil rights complaint in February for allegedly harassing the student.

The state wanted the injunction under the Maine Civil Rights Act to prevent the boys from threatening or assaulting any person because of their perceived sexual orientation.

The state had alleged that Kerry and Gaumont were involved in separate incidents of name calling and harassment, including one in which Kerry allegedly threatened the boy with a knife during a foreign language class.

The Saco Police Department has conducted a criminal investigation of the allegations, a police spokesman said. Criminal charges could be filed if the findings are forwarded to the York County district attorney's office for review.

Sexual Harassment Covers Same-Sex Mistreatment

By Richard Carelli

WASHINGTON (AP) On-the-job torment can be illegal sexual harassment even when the offender and victim are the same sex, the Supreme Court said Wednesday in a decision that could touch virtually every American workplace.

The court said same-sex harassment can violate a federal anti-discrimination law as it voted unanimously to revive a Louisiana lawsuit closely watched by the nation's employers and gay-rights groups.

In that lawsuit, a man alleged he was sexually harassed by three other men while working on a Gulf of Mexico oil rig.

Wednesday's decision provided important new guidelines for resolving sex-harassment claims, but plenty of questions remain about the legality of certain conduct in specific employment settings.

"Common sense and an appropriate sensitivity to social context will enable courts and juries to distinguish" between what is legal and illegal, Justice Antonin Scalia wrote for the court.

"We're very pleased with the commonsense standard the court adopted," said Ann Reesman, a lawyer for the Equal Employment Advisory Council, an employers' group. "This adds some clarity."

Gay-rights advocates also praised the ruling. "Civil rights law will no longer unfairly exclude same-sex sexual harassment, and this fact will benefit all American workers," said Elizabeth Birch of the Human Rights Campaign.

The ruling allows victims of homosexual harassment to get into federal court even though Congress never has said bias based on sexual orientation is illegal.

Kathy Rodgers of the NOW Legal Defense and Education Fund said the ruling "once and for all places sexual harassment law squarely in the mainstream of anti-discrimination law."

The term "harassment" does not appear in the text of the anti-bias law known as Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. But the Supreme Court ruled in 1986 that sexual harassment amounts to discrimination if it creates a "hostile environment" in the workplace.

In subsequent rulings, the justices said a hostile environment can come about not only by overtly sexual behavior but also by "discriminatory intimidation, ridicule and insult ... sufficiently severe or pervasive to alter the conditions of the victim's employment."

Scalia's seven-page opinion said, "We see no justification ... for a categorical rule excluding same-sex harassment claims from the coverage of Title VII." But he warned lower courts about mistaking "ordinary socializing in the workplace such as male-on-male horseplay or intersexual flirtation for discriminatory conditions of employment."

All circumstances must be considered, Scalia said and gave the example of a football coach smacking the fanny of a player who's heading onto the field. Nothing illegal there, Scalia said, but that's not necessarily the case when the coach does the same thing to his secretary, male or female.

He said concerns that Title VII will become "a general civility code for the American workplace" are misguided.

"That risk is no greater for same-sex than for opposite-sex harassment, and is adequately met by careful attention to the requirements of the statute," Scalia said.

He added: "Title VII does not prohibit all verbal or physical harassment in the workplace; it is directed only at discrimination because of sex," Scalia said. "The critical issue ... is whether members of one sex are exposed to disadvantageous terms or conditions of employment to which members of the other sex are not exposed."

In the Louisiana case, a federal appeals court ruled as it threw out Joseph Oncale's lawsuit that the federal law never applies to same-sex harassment.

His sexual-harassment claim stemmed from four months of work in 1991 as a roustabout assigned to a Gulf of Mexico oil rig with Sundowner Offshore Services.

Oncale's lawsuit against Sundowner and three men said he was sexually assaulted, battered, touched and threatened with rape by his direct supervisor, John Lyons, and a second supervisor, Danny Phippen. Another defendant, co-worker Brandon Johnson, was accused of assisting in one of the alleged incidents.

Oncale, who now lives in a small town near Baton Rouge, said he twice reported the situation to his employer's highest-ranking representative on the job site, but no action was taken. He said he quit because he feared the harassment would escalate to rape. All three men named as defendants portrayed their conduct as hazing or locker-room horseplay.

The Supreme Court's decision allows Oncale to take his lawsuit to a jury but does not ensure his ultimate victory.

Justice Clarence Thomas wrote a one-paragraph statement in which he said he joined the court ruling because it made clear there must be proof of "discrimination because of sex."

Thomas' 1991 Supreme Court confirmation hearing was marked by sensational allegations of sexual harassment.

Five Divas Of Disco To Perform At Gay Festival

MYRTLE BEACH, S.C. (AP) emcee.

The disco ball will be spinning during the gay and lesbian pride festival this spring.

The five Divas of Disco will perform May 2 at Doug Shaw Memorial Stadium, Grand Strand nightclub owners said Tuesday.

Performers will include Alicia Bridges ("I Love The Nightlife"); Thelma Houston ("Don't Leave Me This Way"); Vicki Sue Robinson ("Turn The Beat Around"); Sister Sledge ("We Are Family"); and Gloria Gaynor ("I Will Survive").

Deney Terrio, who hosted "Dance Fever," will be the concert

The Village People originally were to perform at Broadway at the Beach. But Burroughs & Chapin Co. Inc., one of the area's largest landowners, said the festival goes against "family values" and refused to allow the outdoor concert at its entertainment complex.

Concert tickets are $25 each and may be purchased by calling Celebrations at (803) 444-3500, Revolutions Retro at (803) 444-8032, or the Pride98 switchboard at (803) 272-3341. Gates open at 3 p.m. May 2 and the five-hour concert starts at 4 p.m.

State Organization Calls For Boycott Of Myrtle Beach

Myrtle Beach, S.C. (AP) Until the mayor changes his tune, union families should vacation elsewhere and union groups find other places for conventions, the president of the South Carolina AFL-CIO says.

"I have heard nothing but discriminatory remarks coming from the mayor," said Donna Dewitt, who wants a boycott until it is clear Mayor Mark McBride won't discriminate.

Last week the mayor voted against closing the streets for a gay rights march, saying he wanted to avoid setting a precedent for skinheads, union groups, abortionists or the Ku Klux Klan.

McBride was the only city council member who opposed closing the streets for the May 2 South Carolina Gay and Lesbian Pride March.

He has said he opposes the "gay lifestyle" but that has nothing to do with closing the streets.

"They might not like what I say, but I have a right to have an opinion, and I haven't discriminated against anybody," McBride said.

McBride said everybody is welcome and his views do not necessarily reflect those of the city. He noted the city lifted the noise ordinance for a concert and closed the streets for the march.

"I am very aware of what the AFL-CIO is, and I would hope they wouldn't in any way do anything against Myrtle Beach just because of the lack of success the unions have had organizing in the state," he said.

At least 50 AFL-CIO unions hold meetings or seminars in Myrtle Beach each year. The union says groups that have already scheduled visits should use only union-affiliated facilities.

City council members are concerned that the labor group, with 55,000 members statewide and 13 million nationally, would encourage a boycott.

"That could really hurt the city, and it's an unfair judgment of the people of Myrtle Beach," Councilwoman Rachel Broadhurst said. "I don't know how the city combats that without leadership from the mayor. He is not speaking for the rest of us."

Patrick Evans, co-chairman of the Gay Pride Festival, has mixed feelings about the boycott.

"I love Myrtle Beach," he said. "While I am very ashamed of what ... Burroughs & Chapin ... and the mayor are doing to damage our reputation, this is my home and I don't want our town to suffer."

Burroughs & Chapin Co. Inc., one of the area's largest landowners, has said the festival goes against "family values" and refused to allow an outdoor Village People concert at its Broadway at the Beach entertainment complex.

Cranky Ovbervations: Spring Fever?

C.M. Brennan

The promise of spring hiding just around the corner gives life to all those heady hopes of renewal under the sun's warming rays: shy daffodils ducking their heads at passersby; maples strip-teasing new leaves from red buds; Slugger the Sea Dog returning from his winter digs in Casco Bay; battalions of bumble bees and single lesbians looking for new honey.

We are at least assured that the bees will get theirs. As for the single lesbians, well.....let's just say that every spring, the Red Sox think they will have a winning season, too. Somehow, I never make it to the big dance, either.

Maybe it's just me, but the older I get, the harder it is to find a suitable date. Seems like when I was in my early twenties, things like financial stability and family-orientation never crossed my mind — all I cared about was if the lady in question was single, even if only for a few hours. Cuteness counted far more than compatibility. Cute simply doesn't cut it anymore. These days, when I look into a woman's eyes, I wanna see "retirement portfolio", not just "I want to make flapjacks on your tummy."

Like a lot of single lesbians, I am tired of the bar scene. Actually, "tired" is the wrong word: "disgusted" is more appropriate. I attempt to avoid any scenario portending romantic interlude in which I am required to holler above the bone-throbbing whump-bump of refrigerator-sized speakers: "WHAT WAS YOUR NAME, AGAIN?"

"DARLENE."

"WHAT!?"

"CALL ME DAR-LENE!"

"I'M NOT GONNA CALL YOU 'DARLING,' WE JUST MET!!"

Worse still when considering that such futile attempts at conversation aren't reserved for the sobriety-challenged: in a bar, it is entirely likely that you will make a complete ass out of yourself without assistance from St. Louis. The possibility for unintended spectacle is inversely proportionate to the amount of alcohol consumed: when a goodly number of patrons are tanked, standing upright makes one stand out like a sore thumb. It can be a trial.

Responding to personal ads is a little like riding a pogo-stick through a mine field: as if the endeavor itself wasn't dangerous enough in its own right, you never know when some pretty peony is going to blow up in your face. School teachers who bemoan the lack of creative writing in modern society have not picked up a copy of Casco Bay Weekly and read the personal ads. Based on my own experience (having met a few women in this fashion), there seems to be some mighty fine creative writing happening on those pages, some more unintentional than the rest.

To wit: "Professional lesbian ISO like-minded other." Professional lesbian — you mean, I could get paid for this? As opposed to an amateur lesbian? Misplaced modifiers aside, it is a challenge to find an ad literate enough to considering answering, no matter how alluringly the others may dangle their participles. And, due to the tide of lesbian chic, it is hard to pick out the genuine article from amongst the lesbian wanna-be crowd: it becomes a classified version of "Where's Waldo?" A few Melissa CDs and a pair of Birkenstocks do not a lesbian make.

There are the on-line chat rooms, of course, which are little more than animated personal ads.

Somehow, I feel that by looking for Ms. Right in the small print section of anything, I might as well dredge up a mail-order bride catalogue from Alaska. Never mind the fact that often what looks good on paper becomes a disaster when translated into reality: one need only look at government efficiency plans for the proof.

Volunteering for community interest groups has potential, provided one can work around the tendency of lesbians to travel and socialize in packs. I have spent entire evenings trying to decipher which women were partnered, which women were hanging out with buddies, and which women were genuine fifth wheels in their assorted coteries. Joining a gaggle of lesbians for an outing is as much an exercise in group dynamics as it is an attempt at personal-level interaction.

Even worse to have your social circle evolve into a Dolly Levi coalition and foist upon you a woman they consider "soooo perfect for you" without your prior knowledge: with my luck this happens on a night when I went out dressed as my laundry hamper. As for politics, well, it's so hard to tell when gazing into the eyes of an activist if the fire I see there is desire or simply revolutionary fervor.

All of which leaves me wondering when and where, if and where, I might meet the woman who will be The One. Drop Me A Line? At City Hall when I renew my fishing license? Hadlock Field? Thumping melons at the local farmer's market? Or, perhaps, when I least expect it, when my hair's a mess and I have once again slopped coffee down my shirtfront, I will look up and there She will be.

Is it ever really that easy? I hope so.

Florida Woman Offended By Library Book Subject Matter

Melbourne, Fla. (AP) If you can't find the gay-oriented book "Daddy's Roommate" in the Brevard County Library, there's a reason.

Coral Lee Craig, who failed to get the book banned from the library last year, has taken matters into her own hands, keeping a copy checked out for about a year.

"There's more than one way to skin a cat," said Ms. Craig, of Palm Bay.

Ms. Craig, a member of the Christian Coalition, said she and some friends have borrowed the book for three weeks at a time throughout the year. They haven't been completely successful since the library system has four more copies of the book.

Ms. Craig said the children's book is inappropriate for youngsters because of its homosexual theme. "Daddy's Roommate" is written from the viewpoint of a young boy whose father divorces his mother and moves in with a male partner.

The book caused a stir when it was published in 1990. Ms. Craig said it's a recruitment tool for gays.

Ms. Craig also has managed to keep another gay-oriented children's book off the shelves. "The Duke Who Outlawed Jelly Beans" tells fairy tales that have gay adults throughout the stories.

The county had only one copy, which Ms. Craig lost.

"I thought I lost it and paid for it," Ms. Craig said. "But I found out I had loaned it to a friend. It's mine now."

Library officials are limited in what they can do to someone like Ms. Craig, said Judith Krug, director of the Office for Intellectual Freedom at the American Library Association.

"We believe its nobody's business what you read or how you use the library," she said. "But personally, if I knew somebody was going out of their way to do this, I would be the first one in line to put my name on the list to see what I wasn't supposed to read."

Favorable Court Rulings Contrast Legislative Progress:

State Republican Parties Adopt Anti-Gay Platforms

WASHINGTON, DC March 2, 1998 Recent court rulings in favor of gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgender (GLBT) rights provided a welcome contrast to the recent, disappointing repeal of Maine's civil rights law and slow-going progress in state legislatures. In less than a week's time - February 27 to March 4 - three important court rulings have come down in favor of equality for GLBT persons.

"The courts have once again proved an important safety net in ensuring basic constitutional and human rights for gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgender people," stated NGLTF executive director Kerry Lobel.

Today the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force released its latest Legislative Update. The Legislative Update tracks GLBT-related and HIV/AIDS-related bills in state legislatures throughout the country for the 1998 legislative year. This Update documents well over 100 pieces of GLBT and HIV/AIDS related bills in 33 states. Attacks against GLBT families in the form of anti-adoption/foster care, anti-marriage, and anti-domestic partnership measures were numerous. In addition to legislation, in other state ne

On the judicial front, on February 27 an Alaska Superior Court rejected the state's request to dismiss a lawsuit filed by two men for the right to marry. Similar to the way the Hawaii marriage case progressed, the judge ruled the State of Alaska must show a compelling interest to prohibit same gender couples from marrying. The state will likely appeal the ruling to the State Supreme Court. If the lower court ruling is upheld, a trial would be held where the state would be made to demonstrate a state inter Days later after the Alaska decision, a New Jersey court came down with a ruling that put yet another dent in the armor of discrimination. On March 2, a New Jersey state appeals court ruled that the Boy Scouts of America prohibition against gay men was a violation of the state's civil rights law which bans discrimination against based on sexual orientation.

Then on March 4, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled unanimously that federal sexual harassment law includes same-sex harassment. This is an important victory as harassment against gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgender persons often occurs as a form of sex harassment where men are ridiculed for being "too feminine" or women for being "too masculine."

These rulings are stark relief to the repeal last month of Maine's civil rights law. The measure was passed by the state legislature and signed into law by Governor Angus King last May. Right wing groups secured signatures to put the issue to a public vote, employing Maine's rarely used ³people's veto² provision. The law was repealed by less than two percentage points on February 10.

The invoking of New Jersey's civil rights law in the Boy Scouts decision highlights the necessity of anti-discrimination laws and the disappointment in the repeal of Maine's law. "These recent decisions further underscore the importance of civil rights laws for our community. Without the law in New Jersey, the court may not have ruled as it did," said Kerry Lobel.

Ten states have laws banning discrimination based on sexual orientation. They are New Hampshire (1997); Rhode Island (1995); Minnesota (1993); California, Vermont and New Jersey (1992); Hawaii and Connecticut (1991); Massachusetts (1989); and Wisconsin (1982).

As of March 11, 1998, the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force tracked 146 gay, lesbian, bisexual, or transgender (GLBT) or HIV/AIDS-related state legislative measures. They have been introduced in 33 states and Puerto Rico. The Task Force has classified 67 of these bills as unfavorable and 79 as favorable to the GLBT community. HIV/AIDS related bills account for approximately a third (49) of all measures tracked. When these HIV-related measures are taken out of the equation, 56 bills are considered favor

In the arena of civil rights, 14 favorable measures were introduced, though passage for most of them seems unlikely. In addition, while 4 states in 1997 passed hate crimes laws that included sexual orientation (see NGLTF's Capital Gains and Losses 1997), it's unlikely that 1998 will come close to a repeat of such a major legislative success.

Insurance Tips: Am I Covered?

by Carolyn Jalbert

Do you use your car in the course of your employment? You may not have coverage!

If your employer asks you to transport clients and you are using your own vehicle you may not have coverage!

In recent month, we have received an alarming influx of phone calls from our insured clients who ask us if they'd be covered if they have rides to clients to medical appointments, interviews or to drive them for personal care errands. If you are providing transportation as a paid employee in nearly all cases your are not covered under your personal auto policy.

If you volunteer, and do not accept monetary compensation, the State of Maine Insurance Department will enforce that your insurance carrier provide coverage under your personal auto insurance policy.

However, if you are an employee and are found liable for an accident or injury while transporting a patient, client or transporting goods during the course of your employment your personal auto policy will not respond.

If you are delivering pizza or sandwiches and use your own vehicle, which is insured under a personal auto policy, your policy will have exclusionary language specific to this regard that you should read. Delivering newspapers with your won car - same problem.

Personal auto policies do not contemplate this additional exposure and are specific about excluding this type of commercial exposure. Personal auto policies do not build a sufficient premium base to support this type of open ended exposure.

There is no way for the employer to control what type of condition the employees auto is in such a regular safety inspection, reviewing driving records, making certain all state safety laws are enforced or that they are adequately insured. It's a litigation nightmare waiting to blow up.

Employers, managers and organization heads - do you want to expose both your organization and employees to lawsuits?

Do you know what your company or organizations position is this on this? Also think twice about what would happen to all those concerned if no coverage is provided.

Whether transporting individuals or pizzas in the course of employment or for a fee, you need commercial liability insurance. Don't take chances, call your agent and make certain you have it in writing that you are covered.

All too often the agent and insurance company don't know that you are using your vehicle for this purpose. Winging it is often the method of choice in our society and we hear it often - Won't happen to me, or I'll chance it.

Doing things the right way may cost a little more but consider the negative impact of an uncovered property loss accompanied by extensive injuries. Court costs alone could drain your household, business or organization of all of its financial resources.

The purpose of carrying insurance is to provide you with protection, but if you choose to ignore a potential exposure - the ramifications can be devastating. When in doubt, call your agent.

Advice to "Ellen": Make Your Point But Make Us Laugh

By Lynn Elber

LOS ANGELES (AP) "Seinfeld," which is about nothing, is wrapping up its nine-year run covered with glory as TV's most popular sitcom. "Ellen," a show that is very much about something, is dying a slow and painful death.

But "Seinfeld" isn't popular because it's about nothing, and "Ellen" isn't facing cancellation because it has a point to make. The difference between the two is more fundamental, at least in TV terms: One is funny, the other isn't anymore.

"I'm gay, the character's gay and that's the problem everyone has with the show. It's just too controversial, nobody wants to deal with it," star Ellen DeGeneres said last week on "Entertainment Tonight," the TV program.

She's right, of course, when it comes to the network. ABC undoubtedly would love to bid goodbye to the headaches "Ellen" has brought it but it couldn't, and wouldn't, if the ratings for the show (9:30 p.m. EST Wednesday) were high enough.

DeGeneres has done little recently to help herself in that quarter.

There is room on sitcoms for messages, sermons, even politics, when they are the seasoning in the stew. But when comedy becomes afterthought, too much is being demanded of viewers.

Plots can revolve around teen-age drug use ("Home Improvement") and drinking ("Boy Meets World" this Friday), around cancer ("Murphy Brown") and weight bias ("The Drew Carey Show") because they are the exception, not the rule.

The shows also know to follow the trail blazed by such 1970s TV pioneers as Norman Lear with "All in the Family" and Larry Gelbart with "M-A-S-H": Even racism, death and war can be dressed up as sitcom fodder with humor as the sugar coating.

"My take has always been we can tackle any subject as long as we're not preachy, as long as we remember we're trying to entertain with it," says Bruce Helford, executive producer of "Drew Carey" and an alumnus of "Roseanne," which explored such issues as domestic abuse.

The Warner Bros. network's kid-oriented comedy "Smart Guy" focuses Wednesday on the difficult subject of sexual predators who find young victims on the Internet.

"Twenty-one out of 22 episodes, we're doing something amusing and funny and not this kind of thing, so we can draw them (the audience) in to pay attention to this one," said executive producer Bob Young.

Such series are playing by TV rules. But not "Ellen," a show trying bravely _ but badly _ to illuminate an aspect of life which at least some Americans prefer to pretend doesn't exist.

DeGeneres and "Ellen" rose to that challenge with last season's sharp and funny coming-out episode, and she drew a sizable audience. But now she and the show seem overwhelmed by the task.

A recent fantasy episode pictured Ellen and her pals in a gay and lesbian world in which heterosexuals are the minority. It had all the wit of an Army training film on hygiene.

A few good lines were scattered throughout, but the premise mostly fell flat as we watched Ellen's gang mock straights for their dancing and their dreadful taste in decorating and Norman Rockwell art. Satire demands a lighter hand.

DeGeneres, who has railed against ABC for slapping warning advisories on her show, scored a point with a TV-watching scene in which an episode of "Mad About You" is labeled for adult subject matter.

"It's so silly. Just because Helen Hunt kisses that guy," Ellen mutters.

Absolutely dead on, and absolutely unfunny because we know how angry DeGeneres is. As a viewer, one starts to feel like a character in a bad '80s film, whining "What about MY needs?"

DeGeneres was right to continue exploring her character's new life, its challenges and joys. And she rightly moved Ellen into a lesbian relationship, just as she had dated men before acknowledging her homosexuality.

But the episodes began to take on the feeling of a primer rather than a comedy, revealing the exploration of a woman's new life. Here's Ellen learning how to be open, here's Ellen helping her friends adjust, here's how narrow-minded the world is.

Perhaps driven by the belief that this season would be "Ellen's" last, DeGeneres hastily crammed in a master's thesis on lesbian sensibility and life.

The result: Viewer affection and influence DeGeneres had gained previously were squandered, and ratings began to fall. She charmed us straight; she could have charmed us as a lesbian.

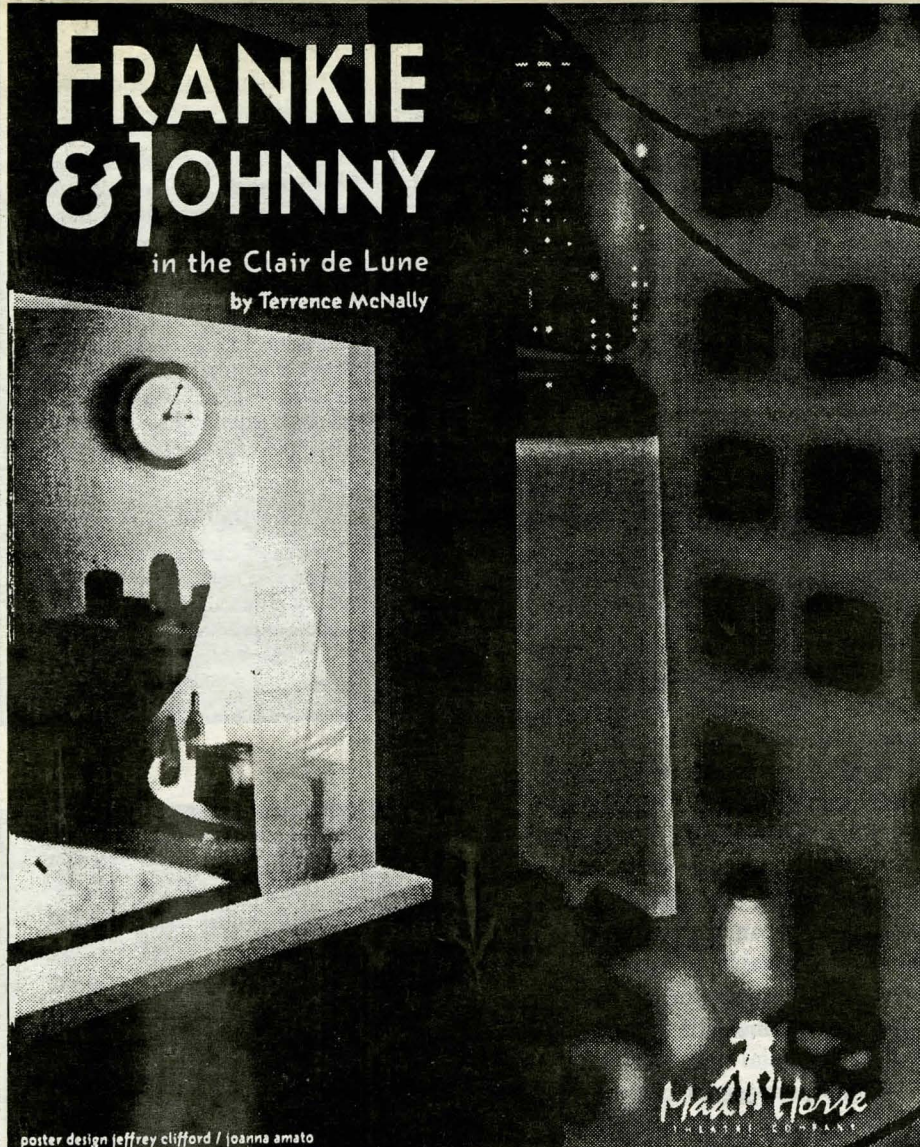

(DeGeneres gets a little help from a friend this week when real-life girlfriend and A-list actress Anne Heche appears on the show. The episode was unavailable for preview).

DeGeneres has said she fully expects ABC to cancel her series after this season. Network officials insist the matter isn't decided, but it's clear they would welcome the show's demisefalling ratings give them an easy out.

The network could argue that it's not getting rid of the first TV program to feature a gay or lesbian lead character; it's merely cutting loose a weak show.

But if ABC would give DeGeneres one more try, with the breathing room and support she needs to do "Ellen" right, and if the actress could give the show the comic edge it must have, it could be turned around.

Maybe we expect too much of DeGeneres and too much of the network. But if they could deliver, viewers might be willing to ask more of themselves.
