

March 30, 1943

Dear Summer:

Good morning!

Both Mother and I would very much appreciate your sending us letters by Air Mail. That was the purpose of the stamps, since otherwise your mail is free. Now you can easily do that by adding an extra three cent stamp either on an envelope or card and it means that we will get the news from you just that much sooner. You see since last Tuesday we have had but one post card and if it were not for the telephone call we would certainly have been worried.

I do hope your cold is much better and that your feet have improved to the point where you need no further treatment.

Mother is going to Boston with Helen for a day or two and so I will have to wait until I get home at night before I read your mail, which I hope will be there waiting for me. Cheerio.

Affectionately,