Should low income women be refused information that is easily available to others?

This is what will happen if the present "gag rule" stands.

Abortion Information

The Supreme Court has recently decided that Family Planning clinics who receive government funding may not answer questions about or discuss the option of abortion when counseling women in crisis pregnancy situations. Any woman who uses Family Planning services will be denied abortion information there. This especially affects low-income women, for whom Family Planning is often the only health care provider. Meanwhile, women with greater economic advantage will be able to easily receive abortion referrals from their private doctors. This is unacceptable and discriminatory.

A bill that would reverse this "gag rule" is now on the floor of the House and Senate. LD 323 and HR 392 would rewrite the Title X regulations and require that Family Planning programs provided non-directive, unbiased counseling on all options for handling an unintended pregnancy. (This is the current Family Planning approach to pregnancy options counseling.)
